On the Cable Steamer Mackay-Bennett With Many Others; Craft Bound for Halifax, Where Hundreds Are Waiting

Gloom Settles Upon the City, Shortly to Be Scene of One Great Funeral; Graves Reserved in Three Cemeteries

HALIFAX, April 27.—The bodies of several New Englanders are aboard the steamer Mackay-Bennett on her way here after searching the sea for the Titanic's dead, it was reported by wireless tonight.

Among them are the bodies of Timothy J. McCarthy, of Dorchester, E. C. Ostby, of the firm of Ostby & Barton, Providence; Frank B. Millet, the artist, of Boston and New York, and Walter C. Porter of Worcester.

The other bodies reported found, in addition to the list sent ashore earlier, are:

Gustafson, Ahnen; Ricks, C. G.; Ale, Pedro; Lesoa, R. A City of Mourning.

On the eve of the expected arrival of the funeral ship Mackay-Bennett, Halifax became a city of mourning tonight. There is a hush throughout the city. Every inch brings scores of relatives of friends of victims who sank with the Titanic two weeks ago. Hundreds are here, filling every hotel, awaiting the coming of the cable ship to identify, if possible, some of the 189 bodies the ship has on board.

On the Mackay-Bennett are the bodies of Colonel John Jacob Astor, President Charles M. Hays of the Grand Trunk Railway, Isidor Straus and many other men of international prominence.

It was reported here tonight that possibly the Mackay-Bennett may reach Halifax tomorrow. Some think the ship may be delayed, so she will not arrive until late tomorrow night or early Monday morning. With opinion was the one held by Manager A. E. Jukes of the White Star line agency in this city.

Every hour adds to the general gloom that hovers over the city which soon will be turned into a public morgue.

"Almost two hundred, think of it," is whispered on every side, and then people ask in hushed tones in hotel lobbies, public conveyances, in shop and on street corners, "Which is she due?" The suspense and tension is widespread. It grips every heart.

In many respects the arrival of the Mackay-Bennett is awaited with almost as tense interest as was that of the rescue ship Carpathia, which after a lapse of almost a week took into New York the first details of the biggest marine disaster of modern times.

Claimants of bodies have been flocking here for days from all points of the compass—the humble and the wealthy, those who found it hard no doubt to scrape up railroad fares, and millionaires who has-

Goes to Prison for a Robbery in Jail

Burlington, Vt., Bad Man Proves That There Is Something New Under the Sun.

BURLINGTON, Vt., April 27.—Frank Cormier, until a day or two ago a prisoner in the Chittenden county jail here, was today sentenced to the State prison at Windsor for a robbery committed in jail. The case is without a parallel in Vermont and, it is believed, without a precedent in the world.

Cormier was serving a long sentence at the jail for habitual drunkenness. He was given work in the basement. He broke a lock on the door to a store-house connected with the residence of Deputy Sheriff Henry Todd. The break was discovered and the prisoner arrested.

Arraigned before Judge Miles in the County Court, Cormier was sentenced to the penitentiary for not less than one year or more than eighteen months.

BAN ON SHEATH SKIRT.

Dr. Francke Says Garment Ruins the Figure.

NEW YORK, April 27.—The sheath skirt and similar fashion atrocities of recent date are discussed at length in an article which Dr. Karl Francke, the eminent German scientist, has contributed to a Munich medical publication. The sheath skirt, he says, is ruining female figures, stunting development and producing a race of knock-kneed women. The doctor says the limbs cannot be straight unless the muscles are allowed regular, unrestricted exercise, which is only possible with wide skirts.

ON STUMP FOR HUSBAND.

Mrs. La Follette Attacks Taft and Roosevelt in Speech.

LOS ANGELES, April 27.—Mrs. Robert M. La Follette, wife of the Wisconsin Senator who aspires to be President, has taken the stump in behalf of her husband's candidacy, and in her first speech before the Woman's Club of Sierra Madre attacked both President Taft and Colonel Roosevelt. She charged the Colonel with not prosecuting the trusts, and President Taft with not revising the tariff downward. Mrs. La Follette will make several speeches in this State.

BABY WEIGHS 180 POUNDS.

It Is a Baby Elephant and Was Born in a Circus Tent.

SALINAS, Cal., April 27.—The heaviest baby ever born in America saw the light here yesterday in a circus tent. He is the offspring of Alice, an elephant, and is two feet tall and three feet long. He weighs 180 pounds. The mother tried to kill her baby, and her trainer in saving the youngster was thrown twenty feet. Unless Alice relents, her baby will have to be brought up on the demijohn. He is husky, pink and healthy.

PRINCE OF WALES COMING.

Plans to Extend American Visit Well Into Summer.

PARIS, April 27.—The Prince of Wales, who is now in this city, will shortly visit the United States, according to the Cri de Paris. The Prince will stay here until well into the Summer, the paper says, after which, in accordance with a plan mapped out by the late King Edward, he will journey to America to receive the "guiding influence of the western world."

ARIZONA RECALL LAW.

Judiciary Provision Is Passed by the Legislature.

PHOENIX, Ariz., April 27.—Both Houses have passed an amendment to the constitution providing for the recall of the judiciary, and Governor Hunt has signed the bill. The vote in the House was unanimous. In the Senate there were two dissenting votes.

COLEMAN GOES OUT FOR A DAILY DRIVE

IS UNGUARDED AT WORK

If Coleman Gets More Rides Than Others, Jailer Explains It Just Happens So.

GREENFIELD, April 27.—George W. Coleman, the dashing young man who looted the Cambridge bank of $500,000 and lost it to the sure-thing gamblers, has been seen down town in Greenfield so frequently of late that thoughtless citizens refer to the former bank clerk as "the jailer's coachman."

Out at the loveliest jail in Massachusetts, this morning, Deputy Sheriff Charles S. Richardson said that this isn't so.

"When I go out for a drive," said Richardson, "or when I go down town on business, I take with me the prisoner who seems to be the handiest. If it happens to be Coleman, he goes; if it happens to be somebody else, somebody else goes."

If Coleman happens to be the luckier man oftener than "somebody else," as appears to be the impression around town, it may be explained by the fact that Coleman is one of the three or four prisoners who are rated as "farm-hands." This Cambridge boy is therefore at work most of the time out of doors. During today's interview he was raking up the lawn at the entrance to the jailor's office. There was no guard over him.

Confidence in the Prisoner.

"There he is now," said Deputy Sheriff Richardson, pointing to Coleman, "you can see how much liberty he has. I use them all alike!" Two other prisoners were also busy about the grounds.

There is no fence to keep Coleman within bounds. Mr. Richardson apparently reposes the utmost confidence in his young prisoner.

"Coleman works hard," his jailer said. "He puts in eight or nine hours every day. He begins his tour of duty by the cool small rank of milking five or six cows. We raise our own milk.

"His fare is exactly the fare of the other farm hands, who, naturally, get a little better table—more food, that is to say—than prisoners who work within doors connected with the jail.

"Our farm consists of about sixty acres. We raise practically everything we use. These products of the farm and garden are served to the prisoners. Coleman's only visitors are his father, his mother and a brother."

Coleman looked as strong as a young ox. He has none of the superfluous flesh he was wont to carry in the days of his high living, magnificent spending and backing "Big Bill" Kelliher's crooked faro game over in New York.

The young banker is as brown as a berry. He entered into the work of raking up the lawn today as if he preferred it to golf. He has the "edge" on Kelliher, as the gamblers might say, in that he is allowed to converse from time to time with his fellow men. While the AMERICAN correspondent was with Deputy Richardson, in the latter's private office, the deputy's office assistant stepped out upon the lawn for a few words with George Coleman.

No Criticism of Richardson.

There is no local criticism of Mr. Richardson for his alleged leniency with Coleman. The deputy has had charge of the jail ever since it was opened, some twenty-four years ago. He has been locally celebrated for years, in Franklin county, as one of the kindest of men. He anticipated by many years the modern school of humanitarian jailers.

Coleman is at present one of but fifteen prisoners, one of them a woman. No other prisoner is here for more than a few months. Coleman's sentence was for fifteen years.

The story of Coleman's daily drives down town on an errand, to call at some Greenfield store or to drop around to the postoffice, has apparently traveled far and wide and served to have lent much lure in its travels. Men who come to town to spend a day or two at the Weldon, or the Mansion House, have told how Boston believes a yarn that Coleman occasionally drops around to one of the hotels for dinner with a prominent guest, and how the pair subsequently take a spin in an automobile. The young woman of this yarn is said to be Mamie Hightower.

Under the stress of excitement, Deputy Sheriff Richardson is inclined to be almost an explosive person. He came near exploding today when this yarn was repeated to him.

"A pack of nonsense," he said, finally. "Coleman doesn't go anywhere that I don't go. Mamie Hightower hasn't been in this building since the December of 1910."

Coleman was still busy with the lawn as the reporter came away from the Franklin County Jail. The day was beautiful. The young man from Cambridge appeared

Roosevelt Scores the Back Bay; Says G. W. Perkins Is His Friend; Enthusiastic Rallies for Clark

CLARK IS SURE OF NOMINATION, SAYS WILLIAMS

Confident Speaker Will Carry Democratic Primaries Here and Win at Baltimore.

BIG CROWDS AT RALLIES

AT an early hour this morning there was no doubt in the mind of any of the Champ Clark leaders in Massachusetts that the Speaker will carry Greater Boston on Tuesday, high and dry. All were confident after their tours of the State that the result will be about the same throughout Massachusetts.

The greatest battery of Democratic orators that ever invaded the East at one time, delivered the Champ Clark message last night to enthusiastic audiences in East Boston, Roxbury, Dorchester, Chelsea, Brockton and Lowell. The meetings everywhere were big and enthusiastic.

On the list of speakers were Congressmen John M. Graham of Illinois, William P. Borland of Missouri, James T. Lloyd of Missouri, Scott Ferris of Oklahoma, Joseph J. Russell of Missouri, Jack Beall of Texas, Frank Buchanan of Illinois and James M. Curley of Boston, and former Congressman George Fred Williams.

At 1 o'clock this morning Congressman Curley staked his reputation as a prophet and a statesman on the declaration that Speaker Clark will carry the presidential primaries on Tuesday by a "substantial majority." A poll taken yesterday at the Congressman's suggestion indicated that the Clark vote in Boston will be 2 to 1 against Governor Wilson. The Roxbury Congressman received an ovation last night wherever he appeared.

Wilson Impossible.

Congressman James M. Graham, of Springfield, Illinois, an attorney, made a tremendous hit at the rallies in Chelsea and elsewhere. There was loud applause when Mr. Graham, showing himself a fighter who fights fair, declared that the real friends of Speaker Clark "are making no personal warfare on any candidate" but are "fighting for Mr. Clark."

George Fred Williams roused the same audiences by declaring that the narrow-minded writings of Governor Wilson have made the Jerseyman's nomination "impossible."

This was the Champ Clark speech of Congressman Graham of Illinois:

"We are engaged in a friendly preliminary contest to determine who the Democrats will enter for the final contest for presidency next November. It is of the utmost importance that we make a wise choice, for the nominee of the Baltimore convention is pretty sure to be the next President of the United States.

Champ Clark's friends are making no personal warfare on any candidate. They are not against any candidate, they're for Mr. Clark.

Must Overcome Misrule.

"The conditions which now exist and which we must overcome have resulted from forty years of Republican misrule, of special favors granted by Republican legislation to favored interests and individuals who have contributed enormous campaign funds to the Republican party, which it used to buy its way to power, and when in power it made prompt payment to the donors by more special legislation in their interest, thus enabling them to collect from the American people many times more than the amount contributed.

"What hope is there that the party which has been the beneficiary of their gifts will make any honest effort to force them into obedience to the law?

"Under Republican rule this system of legislative favoritism has resulted in concentrating the wealth produced by American industry to such an extent that 1 per cent. of the people own more than the 99 per cent.—a condition fraught with danger to our institutions.

"Wealth means power, and this one per cent. has been exerting the power of its great wealth by keeping in power the party that enabled it to become so wealthy."

Republicans Hopeless.

"The people have nothing to hope for from either of the Republican candidates in the way of relief. Each of them accuses the other of being the friend and

Are you in any doubt about your vote in the Presidential Primaries of Tuesday?
Be guided by the Honest face of CHAMP CLARK

CHAMP CLARK.

CHAMP CLARK'S face has won him nearly as many votes as his record and the arguments of his friends.

There is not a voter in the republic who can look at that strong, brave face and fail to know that he fronts an honest, high-minded man.

Clark is a statesman of such noble vein
That to be trusted needs but to be seen.
And seen but once, familiar with his face.
We first admire, then vote for, then embrace.

It is significant and inspiring that Illinois, the great State of Abraham Lincoln, should roll up 140,000 MAJORITY FOR CHAMP CLARK.

The people know their own—and they know Champ Clark. He is much of the type of Lincoln—strong, rugged, homely, simple in manner, full of humor, great hearted and incorruptibly honest.

They said of Lincoln in the beginning what many foolish people have said of Clark—that he was ungainly, that he was awkward, that he was simple, that he was not a strong man. But the men and women who bowed and swayed in the "storm and tempest of the sixties" learned to look as to a lighthouse upon that kindly, simple, rugged man of Illinois.

And this rugged man of Missouri has the granite fibre, the proven record, the unpretending honesty and the unflinching courage for the vital times in which we live.

It is the strong man to whom the people turn in times of need.

Neither the scholar nor the professor, neither the theorist nor the doctrinaire, neither the changeful commentator nor the persuadable politician, but the man whose convictions stand rocklike, and whose record is open and consistent, will meet the needs of a great people struggling out of corporate control and machine manipulation into a re-establishment of the power and the popular sovereignty which the fathers consigned to them and which the selfishness of greedy plutocrats and the complaisance of political weaklings have lost to them.

Champ Clark is the type of leader under whom the people are likely to regain their own.

If you don't believe it, look him in the face and be convinced.

THE RESULT OF THE SUNDAY AMERICAN'S "STRAW VOTE" POLL OF MASSACHUSETTS VOTERS WILL BE FOUND ON THE FIRST PAGE OF PART II. OF THIS EDITION.

'TAFT MEANS WELL, BUT HE MEANS WELL FEEBLY.'—T. R.

Arena Was Jammed Just as It Was Jammed for Taft; an Overflow Meeting, Too, the Same as for the President

Colonel Makes Only a Passing Reference to Mr. Taft; Then an Hour About the Courts; Great Crowd Disappointed

COLONEL THEODORE ROOSEVELT came to the Boston Arena last night to deliver an attack on the "silk stocking" of the Back Bay, to compare twelve of his own lieutenants with twelve of the men he says are backing President Taft, to declare that the President of the United States "means well, but means well feebly," and to make a final effort to tone down the Columbus, Ohio, speech in which he advocated the recall of court decisions.

As many people as could jam into the Arena were packed there to hear the third term candidate. In this respect the crowd was equal to that which turned out Thursday night to hear the President.

When the last man and woman had managed to squeeze into the Arena there was still a crowd quite as big out in the street. So there had to be an "overflow" meeting. Here, again, the Roosevelt demonstration equalled the Taft demonstration. Everything seemed to bear out the promise of the AMERICAN'S straw vote, that the President and his rival are running along neck and neck in the race to be determined by Tuesday's primaries.

Colonel Quotes Emerson.

Colonel Roosevelt was exceedingly bitter about the Back Bay. He read two lines from Emerson, which he said, are very popular in the Back Bay:

"For fishers and choppers and plowmen Shall constitute a State."

But he said these lines are popular in the Back Bay "only as poetry of the past and not as politics of the present."

There was at least one young man in the Arena throng whom Roosevelt would have been glad to peg out by the scruff of the neck. This was the young man who asked Colonel Roosevelt, "How about Perkins?"

The Colonel had been comparing twelve Roosevelt men with twelve Taft men, the selection in each case being Colonel Roosevelt's. The lineup, therefore, was like this:

ROOSEVELT	TAFT
Gov. Hadley	Sen. Lorimer
Gov. Bass	Sen. Penrose
Gov. Stubbs	Sen. Gallinger
Gov. Johnson	Sen. Gugge-heim
Ex-Sen. Beveridge	Ex-Sen. Aldrich
Sen. Clapp	Ex-Sen. Stephenson
Sen. Bristow	Mr. Keating
Frank Heney	Mr. Barnes
Gifford Pinchot	Ross Cox
Garfield	Mr. Cannon
Ben Lindsey	Mr. Billings
Jacob Riis	Patrick Calhoun

Colonel Roosevelt read the "Roosevelt Twelve" first. He hadn't begun on the Taft Twelve before the bad young man called out in a voice like a fog horn:

"How about Perkins?"

There was an uproar for a minute. Voices called to "throw him out!"

Colonel Roosevelt stopped then. He said he wanted the young man to stay. Then he said, of Perkins, that "He's my friend."

The ex-President got away from the subject of Taft, after that, with all possible speed. He merely said of the man whom he forced upon the American people four years ago that "he means well, but he means well feebly." And that was all.

For the rest, the Roosevelt speech was a toast for the silk stocking element of Boston's Back Bay and a defence of his Columbus, O., "recall of decisions" speech, which he cleverly turned about to a bid for the votes of all good railroad men and all good cigarmakers.

The AMERICAN'S report of the Roose-

FIGHT TO HEAR COL. ROOSEVELT

vell, speech was taken down by professional stenographers. Colonel Roosevelt said in part:

What Roosevelt Said.

My Friends and Fellow Citizens, Men and Women of Massachusetts, Men and Women of Boston: I am glad indeed to be in your old Commonwealth, and I welcome this evening to plead for a cause which is pre-eminently the cause for which Massachusetts has stood through all her existence as a sovereign and independent commonwealth.

Last night I felt obliged to answer at length the attacks made upon me by Mr. Taft, but to-day I am not going to pretend to be put on the defensive in any friends. (Applause.) Good! And therefore I am glad to be here to-day, and I came here to-night, I shall only allude to Mr. Taft just so far as it is necessary for me in order to illustrate the issue and to show what I and I respectively stand.

And now at the outset, to dispose of the matter of primary and I desire to take up in connection with Mr. Taft, I am sorry fortune has put Mr. Taft in my friends. (A voice: "Yes indeed, you are!")

When Mr. Taft came here on Thursday, and I came here on Friday, Mr. Taft came here having lost the State of Illinois by overwhelming majorities in the State of New Hampshire. (Laughter.) In Illinois Mr. Taft's chief opponent had been Mr. Lorimer (hisses); in New Hampshire my chief opponent at first instrument, had been Governor Bass. (Great applause.) And Mr. Taft came here to explain that he didn't lose Mr. Lorimer (Laughter and applause), having lost him he utterly refused to run any confidential (laughter) until Mr. Lorimer had resigned. (Laughter.)

"Bully" for Bass.

And I came here to say that, with or lose, I am with Governor Bass every time, and that I count it the highest privilege to have had him as my champion, and I would rather lose with him than win with the forces allied against me. (Great applause.) Governor Bass, I am glad to say, has one more moment about Mr. Lorimer. (Laughter and applause.) Mr. Lorimer is utterly politically dead, Mr. I'll was originally a year and a quarter ago, and he is dead now, and so that time he requested me not to accept Mr. Lorimer's political support for fear of would help Mr. Lorimer. (Laughter and applause.) Mr. Lorimer is dead ten several months, until I became in a position to run against Mr. Lorimer was going on with such excessive secrecy (laughter) that neither Mr. Lorimer nor any of his friends knew that there was an assault—as a matter of fact, Mr. Lorimer had then packed up the cadaver that I had dropped and Mr. Lorimer publicly, again. (Applause.)

And I came to attack him in Massachusetts after the Illinois primaries. I attacked him in Illinois before the Illinois primary. (Applause.) I was informed before I went there that I ought not to attack Mr. Lorimer because he had many friends, some of whom intended to vote for me, and that I would alienate their support, and I answered to them that I would rather lose every delegate in Illinois than by silence connive at the wickedness of which Mr. Lorimer had been guilty.

Who Are the Bosses For.

And I fought it out fair and square on that issue from one end of Illinois to the other and I voted. "You did.") And I won. (Applause.) And I got every delegate in Illinois except two, the two from the district which Mr. Lorimer carries in his waistcoat pocket, and those two are for Mr. Taft. And, friends, it would not have been possible for me to have supported Mr. Lorimer at all, to have acquiesced in his support for me, had I not been and I had been going to repudiate him I would have repudiated him before the Illinois primary and not afterwards.

I have got a couple of columns arranged parallel here on certain days of my representative support—and the other containing a dozen of my representative supporters—and the other containing a dozen foremost supporters of Mr. Taft. Those two lists, I will send you these two lists, and I will ask you to judge for yourselves. Will A voice: "Good for you!" Laughter.) I will read you the dozen of my supporters here—Governor Deneen, Governor Hughes, Governor Stubbs, Governor Johnson, Governor Berry, Governor Bristow, Mr. Frank Heney, Mr. Gifford Pinchot, Mr. Medill McCormick, Bob Lindsey, Jacob Riis.

(A voice: "How about Perkins?") Perkins? He is for me.

You can tell him I will tell you. Wait a minute. You can't put a question to me that I will not answer, and I will put

HARVARD ATHLETE FOSTER A BENEDICT

Captain of 1911 Track Team Takes Miss Wentworth of New Bedford for Bride.

NEW BEDFORD, April 27.—The wedding today of Miss Marion Wentworth of this city and Charles Orrin Foster, Harvard '11, captain of his college track team, and a student under Al Bolton, was celebrated in the Unitarian church here by Rev. William H. Lexington.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank W. Wentworth of New Bedford. Foster is the son of Charles H. W. Foster of Boston. A special train brought a number of guests from Boston. Reginald Phelps, brother-in-law of the groom, was best man; Miss Elaine Hunter, of Evanston, Ill., maid of honor; Miss Helen Foster, Miss Hilda Foster, Nancy Johnson, May Hicks, Miss Hilda Sise and Miss Frances Allen, flower girls.

The gowns were of great beauty. The bride was attired in white satin, trimmed with princess lace and orange blossoms. She carried a shower bouquet of lilies-of-the-valley. Miss Hunter, maid of honor, wore yellow satin, and the bridesmaids white.

The ushers were Howland Wentworth, Fred Warner, George West, Elliot Cutler, Edward Saunders and E. Chester Hoyt. Following the ceremony a brilliant reception was held at the home of the bride's parents on Walnut street.

TELEPHONE GIRLS DANCE.

It Is to Be Hoped They Will Not Trip Over Their Club Name.

The Exchequer club, composed of girls employed in the Main Exchange of the telephone company, will hold a dance next Thursday evening at Catholic Union Hall. The dance committee is made up of the Misses Ella M. Anderson, May E. Doran, Helen A. Kelleher, Ethel M. McCarthy, Mary C. Leary and Alice B. O'Brien. The management of the club is denoted by the name, which is the word "telephone" spelled backward.

DR. VAN ALLEN HITS SMOKING BY CLERGY

Rector Scores Episcopalian Ministers in This State Who Use Cigarettes.

Rev. William H. van Allen, D. D., rector of the Church of the Advent, scores Episcopal ministers in this State who smoke cigarettes. He holds up before the ministers the action of twenty-five merchants and manufacturers of Joliet, Ill., who have signed an agreement to prevent employes from smoking cigarettes and promise larger wages to abstainers.

This action pleases Dr. Van Allen and he has sent out a printed message to Episcopal clergy calling attention to this action on the part of the citizens of that western city.

"Perhaps some of our cigarette-smoking clergy can give a reason for this action on the part of the merchants and manufacturers of Joliet," declares Dr. Van Allen. "When one considers the number of States where the manufacture and sale of these illsmelling and poisonous instruments of parcels are wholly forbidden by law, the use by men leading a pure life of life seems questionable.

"What a pity it is that our Episcopal clergy are a class should almost always lag behind in moral reforms.

"As in slavery days, so in this sane and scientific crusade against tobacco, Episcopal ministers see Protestant believers of every sort leading the way and themselves live and stroll and smoke in the minute rear, two or three generations behind the times. Too bad."

The remarks of Dr. Van Allen have stirred up the smoker clergy who use cigarettes, for out of the 215 ministers in the diocese of Massachusetts 175 use tobacco.

Address by President Lowell.

President A. Lawrence Lowell of Harvard addressed the officers of one of the battleships now at teh Charlestown Navy Yard, on the subject of Espionage, to the Navy. He issued notice that the Espionage Congress of the United States would be held at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology next July.

NORTH CARVER ON THE ANXIOUS SEAT

Dan Hines Is Dynamiting and the Feud of '96 Is on Again.

The people of an entire village, down at the gateway to Cape Cod, go to bed every night with one ear cocked for dynamite.

The village is North Carver, eight miles southeast of Plymouth and thirty-eight miles from Boston. It is 122 years old and is one of four villages in a township with a population of 1,663.

"Cranberry culture is the chief industry of this town," the conservative Massachusetts Year Book says about it. It about one-third of the entire yield of the United States of harvested each year.

If the Massachusetts Year Book wasn't sitting with its spare it might have added that ever since 1896 the village of North Carver has been furnishing about one-half of all the trouble in the world.

A reporter who was visiting around North Carver yesterday was told by persons with a keen fun-sense that the row of the beginning and the end of all the trouble is "Dan Hines." He owns or controls two-thirds of the family machinery reputed the master of the house to discuss Dan Hines with the reporter. "A horrid reporter," chuckled "George," said one, "don't keep out of it."

Up in Plymouth, Mr. Dan'l Hines himself, confessing that he has already been livening up North Carver by the judicious use of dynamite, said the trouble was all due to less than half a dozen men who have been opposing him ever since he started the Village Improvement Society, some sixteen years ago.

"It began in jealousy," Dan Hines says, "and it has grown and flourished in hatred and spite."

Hines had been living in North Carver only seven years when he got up the Village Improvement Society. Trouble came at once. He was advised by one of the Opposition to settle in favor of "some of the old residents." He refused.

Hines Village Improvement Society held new sidewalks about the village. Sprinkling carts managed to stumble over these cuttings, and Hines see Protestant letters of every sort leading the way and themselves live and stroll and smoke in the minute rear, two or three generations behind the times. Too bad."

The remarks of Dr. Van Allen have stirred up the smoker clergy who use cigarettes, for out of the 215 ministers in the diocese of Massachusetts 175 use tobacco.

Address by President Lowell.

President A. Lawrence Lowell of Harvard addressed the officers of one of the battleships now at teh Charlestown Navy Yard, on the subject of Espionage, to the Navy. He issued notice that the Espionage Congress of the United States would be held at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology next July.

Dan's Next Venture.

Dan Hines' next venture was in the direction of street lights. The people reached for their hammers. They said North Carver had as much use for street lamps as a fish has for legs. They said that 98 per cent. of the people of North Carver go to bed at 9 o'clock. They said lots of things. They said Dan Hines was "too fresh."

The Board of Selectmen of that day took a hand—against Dan Hines—and hemmed and hawed and iffed and anded so much about street lights, that soon the fighters became as unpopular as sidewalks.

The newcomer was congratulated quite after his until, in S. H. Fink's general store one night, everybody discussed the new law about flags on schoolhouses. Dan Hines suggested that North Carver ought to have a flagpole on the village green, with the Stars and Stripes floating from it.

This idea made such a hit that eventually the Opposition stood in. They collected a few dollars that night in Finks store. He passed the hat around the town. Finally he had raised between $80 and $90. He engaged Jerry Symmonds parties to deliver and raise the pole, only to find, when the time came, that three Plymouth contractors had been paid by the opposition.

If North Carver had a moving picture house, or a 10:30-50 theatre, or a meeting Board of Aldermen, or a professional prizefighter, or a losing ball nine, Dan Hines and his lobsters might have been forgotten. As it happened Brother Hines was the one and only subject of discussion and contention. So they kept at it.

As the opposition had beaten Hines to Plymouth, and had paid for the pole on the village green, it was quite enough. Hines had not expended the money he had raised, so two of those who contributed fifty cents apiece accused him of "embezzling" and forthwith had John Indicted. A Plymouth County jury laughed the case out of court.

Hines had been so successful up to this time, that they almost let him alone for a few years. They went at him again, however, when he sought to close the right of way across his nine-acre tract at the depot.

The 300 people who live on Plymouth street in North Carver had been cutting across this property for a century. To them a half mile—walk around by the street and through the main street.

They got an injunction. They hailed Dan Hines up to Boston and the Supreme Court. He was told to "behave."

Just a Right of Way.

With the order of the court the anti-Hines folks concluded that they "had him." Hines sold nothing. He put no crops, however, he devoted himself to the law about rights of way. A short time ago he consulted an attorney at New Bedford.

"Folks said he was a failure," Dan Hines says, "and a fighter was what I wanted."

When Hines told the New Bedford attorney that there had been a court decree against him on the right of way matter the lawyer tried to stop him. "I don't want to hear any more," he said.

"But," said Hines, "my contention is that the building of a railroad across this right of way has made this original grant of no value."

"So you get my point? This 'right of way' was a dummy railroad from New Haven Railroad. To step out upon the railroad tracks is to be guilty of trespass. Of what good is this 'right of way,' they have been talking about? It is to them no good. It leads up against a Chinese Wall. They cannot have a right of way over my bog to a place where nobody has the right to go."

"Quite so," said the fighting attorney. They mapped out a new piece of campaign and Dan Hines went back to his cranberry bog with dynamite. He opened up bridges and he destroyed paths.

Ten of a dozen nights one of the men and boys of the village put these things back. Hines promptly blew them up again.

Middle Name "Trouble?"

If Dan Hines lived in a city of from 50,000 to 75,000 people he would prove "notions" might be hailed with enthusiasm. In a small town his desire to be out in the front of things is apt to get on the nerves of natives and old residents.

Everybody in North Carver who discussed Dan Hines yesterday with a sunny AMERICAN reporter, made substantially the same request:

"Don't mention my name in any controversy about Dan Hines. Please leave me out of it. If Dan Hines has a middle name it's 'Trouble.'"

Manufacturer's Unloading SALE

Six Hundred Women's Tailored SUITS

$25.00 Values — $27.50 Values

$14.75

Manufacturers are already beginning to unload their Spring stocks in order to get an early start on next Fall styles.

Every suit in this sale is a bonable $25.00 or $27.50 value and is sold at $14.75 for a good and sufficient reason —given above.

2—Finest Spring Fabrics.
3—Leading Spring Shades.
ARE THE 3 GREAT CHARACTERISTICS OF THIS SALE.

No better tailoring could be desired. Every suit strictly hand tailored by the best paid, highly skilled tailors in the country. Not only well made, but well lined.

Suits, made not for beauty alone, but for service alone, not for style alone, nor for quality alone.

Suits wherein beauty and service, style and quality are combined.

Sensational $25.00 Values.
Sensational $27.50 Values.
At a SENSATIONAL BARGAIN PRICE—$14.75

THE MATERIALS are serges, hairlines, worsteds, various mixtures, etc. The colors, of course, are those most wanted this season—the shades of the highest grade.

THE COLORS are navy, black, copenhagen, tan, brown, gray and many stripe and mixture effects. There are black and white stripe effects in worsted that are particularly effective. There are also a few white suits with neat black stripes.

THE TRIMMINGS include the most fetching braids, lace collars and cuffs, corded silk, fancy buttons, in fact all the season's latest and most approved trimmings.

THE MODELS are varied but uniformly good. The coats are mostly cutaways. There are Eton models with longer coats. One stunning model in various colors and materials has long sleeve effect in front and shallower in rear.

ALL SIZES, 34 to 44 and a few extra sizes.

Wonderful Value—A Real $30 or $35 Suit for $19.75

The most extraordinary achievement in high-grade suits ever recorded at this season of the year. Stores all around us are asking $30.00 and $35.00 for less attractive styles.

The suits at $19.75 are truly elegant indeed. Now, just at the very opening of the Spring season, it is possible to obtain the choicest materials and the most authentic styles in this assortment.

Whipcords, French serge, Bedford cord mixtures and other equally desirable materials are shown, and they are shown not only in the staple blues, blacks, but such shades as tan, gray and lavender as well.

Among the models are many that we have had copied from the more expensive suits. One model is made with narrow satin revers and fastens with heavy silk frogs with four loops. Another model is an adaptation of one of the very latest models, made with cutaway front and has very new and odd collar.

Special mention may be made of some especially stunning models in silk suits. They are made in finest quality changeable taffeta in a splendid new model with fancy back and lace collar and cuffs.

These suits are tailored particularly well and will compare favorably with many custom-made garments. The coats are all lined throughout with linings of best quality in various contrasting shades. Sizes 34 to 44.

Store Your Furs

Don't Take Any Chances—We Insure Them Against Fire, Theft and Moths

OUR FUR VAULTS ARE IN OUR OWN BUILDING

Take Elevator to 7th Floor—Essex St. Side.

FURS, LIKE JEWELS, should be entrusted only to the care of those having the best facilities. We have the best facilities for protecting your furs against fire, theft and moths, because our storage vaults are on the premises, under the daily supervision of our Fur experts, and our patrons are invited to call any time without notice for an inspection of the vaults, to see that their furs are properly stored.

Upon presentation of receipt we will deliver your furs, without loss of time, as the same never leave our session.

Special wagon service will respond immediately to your call. Experienced men will relieve you of all packing and attendant cares.

Every garment thoroughly brushed by experts to remove every particle of dust, before being stored.

The below-freezing-point atmosphere makes the vaults absolutely moth-proof. The cold blast system from an adjoining chamber obviates all danger of moisture.

Remaking done in our own workroom at reasonable prices.

Charges based upon a fair annual valuation of the garments, insures same for the amount specified, at the rate of 2%, which insures same for the amount entered against every possible loss.

Minimum charge, 50 cents for small articles and $1.00 for large garments.

Repairing Done at Moderate Prices

A phone call—2600 Oxford—or a postal will immediately bring our wagon for your goods. We do the rest.

HOW TO ARBITRATE PUZZLES ENGINEERS

Chief Stone Expected to Make Known His Views to Commissioner Neill Soon.

NEW YORK, April 27.—United States Commissioner of Labor Charles P. Neill and Judge Alfred C. Coxe of the United States Commerce Court believe that their negotiations with the representatives of fifty railroads, the Eastern territory and the engineers over the question of increased pay will not more unsatisfactory, but define to disagree on the issues involved rather than to say that progress is being made.

The two mediators conferred again today with the subcommittee of railway managers and no doubt will meet the committee of the engineers. The belief is that the whole dispute will ultimately be settled by an arbitration board, but the millionaire and the engineers are said to be not in accord on how this board should be made up. Neither side is discussing the situation in the meantime are said to have requested that no statement be made about the negotiations.

GRAND TRUNK BILL COMING, THEY SAY

"General" Bill, as Some Had Feared, and Not What Was Asked For.

The sub-committee of the Legislative Committee on Railroads, which was appointed to draft a general bill which will liberalize the railroad laws of the State so that the Grand Trunk or any other like railroad may come into Massachusetts, will make its report this week.

This was stated by Representative George H. Ellis of Newton, House chairman of the Railroad Committee and a member of the sub-committee, last night. Mr. Ellis added:

"The sub-committee, I have reason to believe, will be unanimously agreed on the bill and it will not be antagonistic to the Grand Trunk or anybody else. We propose to make the measure fair to all sides, so far as we are able to do so.

Representative Ellis declared also that a general bill will not be beyond the scope of the original Grand Trunk petition, and that there will be no possibility, therefore, of any opposition of the Grand Trunk proposition having the measure ruled out on a point of order. He further stated that the measure to be reported will be entirely apart from the Governor's railroad development proposition, which includes a proposition for the leasing of the Boston & Maine to the New Haven Railroad.

The sub-committee was appointed on April 2. It has held a number of hearings since that time, at which the bill which it was instructed to report was discussed. The members of the committee are: Senator Schoonmaker of Ware, chairman; Senator Powers of Roslin, and Representatives Ellis of Newton, Wolcott of Milton and Barclay of Uxbridge.

Robert Emmet Branch Meeting.

Robert Emmet Branch, United Irish League, will meet this evening in Dennis Hall, No. 1,654 Washington street. The several committees of the branch will submit annual reports. Eugene S. Cronin will preside.

Suffragists Fight "Women First" Idea

Mrs. Pankhurst Says When Women Get the Vote Men Will Leave Wrecks First.

LONDON, April 27.—Fearing that the gallantry shown by the men on board the Titanic will hurt the cause of suffrage, the militant wing of the suffragist party in England is taking steps to combat any loss of prestige through that channel. The proposal from the militants in the United States that in similar disasters of the future women give way to men and insist that they themselves be saved first, has been welcomed here. Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst, leader of the militants, said today:

"We are dealing with a tradition when we discuss man's gallantry in the case of shipwrecks. When women get the ballot and other rights which are theirs it will not be necessary for men to give way. Women will be just as able to take care of themselves as men. There will be no specialized 'weaker sex' then."

HENRY SIEGEL TO SAIL.

Will Accompany Daughter, Titanic Survivor, to England.

Henry Siegel, president of the Henry Siegel Company, is to sail for England on Tuesday, on the steamship Kaiser Wilhelm, accompanied by his daughter, Mrs. T. W. Wendlish, one of the Titanic survivors, whose husband perished with the ill-fated White Star liner.

Mr. Siegel goes abroad for the purpose of settling the large estate left by Mr. Cavendish, his son-in-law, who belonged to one of the oldest families in England. Mr. Cavendish had been offered the Conservative nomination for a seat in the Parliamentary election just before he sailed for America.

Mrs. Cavendish has recovered sufficiently from her terrible experiences and sorrow to make the return trip to England. Her two young aged three and five years, are in London, awaiting her coming.

To Discuss Womanhood.

"The Newer Womanhood" will be the topic to be discussed at the meeting of Universalist ministers of Greater Boston tomorrow morning in Ballou Hall, Boylston street. Mrs. Glendower Evans will open the discussion.

TASTE OF FREEDOM IN COURT FOR THAW

White's Slayer Enjoys Temporary Release From Asylum in Fight for Freedom.

NEW ROCHELLE, N. Y., April 27.—Harry K. Thaw, slayer of Stanford White, appeared today before Justice Keogh in Chambers, in another effort to be freed from Matteawan, where he has been confined for more than four years. The appearance was on a writ of habeas corpus.

Today's hearing was brief. Clarence J. Shearn, Thaw's attorney, stated that Thaw was not insane and that his release would not be a public menace. It was agreed finally that the case should be held to await the justice's convenience, and the writ was accordingly set for May 6 at White Plains.

It was the first time in three years that Thaw had been out of the confines of Matteawan. He has taken on considerable weight, and his cheeks seem to diminish the prominence of his eyes. Despite his plumpness, his eyes still seem considerably bright.

When he reached the court room he was greeted by his mother, his sister Alice, formerly the Countess of Yarmouth, and Homer O'Meara of Pittsburg.

When the adjournment was taken Thaw held a sort of a levee. He declared that he was feeling fine and seemed particularly glad to be in the open again.

"How feels to get out again now?" someone asked.

"From 185 to 187," he replied.

He seemed willing to talk a lot, but Mr. Shearn told he thought it would not be well for him to say too much. Then Thaw and his party started back to Matteawan.

In Memory of Shoe Men.

At a meeting of the directorate of the New England Shoe and Leather Association held last Wednesday afternoon, particular action will be taken on the deaths of George O. Clifford of Stoughton, Walter C. Porter of Worcester and John T. Maguire of Brockton, members of the association who were lost when the Titanic sank.

$150,000 SUITS FILED BY FALL RIVER MAN

E. F. Mooney, Former Liquor Dealer, Seeks Damage for Failure to Get License.

FALL RIVER, April 27.—Suits aggregating $150,000 were filed today by Edward F. Mooney, a former liquor dealer of this city, against Frederick W. Lawson, the police commissioner; Rudolph P. Haffenreffer, Jr., treasurer of the Old Colony Breweries Company; George D. Flynn, the president of the company, and Edward V. Fannin, an employe of the breweries. Lawyer George Grime and George Omerod, a liquor dealer.

Each man was sued individually. Attachments were made on their property. Mooney charges that they all conspired against him to prevent his getting a liquor license. He is the former proprietor of a liquor saloon in the eastern section of the city. When Fall River went no-license two years ago he retained his shop. He claims that all his efforts to get a license since then, now that the city has gone "wet" again, have been frustrated by the men whom he is now suing.

The attachments were recorded today with the register of deeds. The bills are returnable the first Monday in June, at the Bristol County Court House in Taunton.

Eagles' Annual Ball.

The third annual ball of Boston Aerie No. 67, Fraternal Order of Eagles, will be held in Paul Revere Hall, Mechanics' Building, tomorrow evening. Governor Eben S. Draper, Mayor Fitzgerald, Corporation Counsel Curley and members of the State's government have been invited to attend.

Kosmos Bottles at Less Than ½ Price

The price of the regular Thermos Bottles, according to the pint. Less, cannot be cut. For this finest quality, in nickel case, made specially, so as to replace glass bottle if broken, pints $2.50, quarts $3.50.

In order to meet competition of imitators they recently took a lot of spunable bottles to above, stamped them Thermos and allowed the price to be cut. We have a lot of them, heavy nickel plated spunable case, silver screw cap-top cap, and a valuable glass filler, instead of asking the above price we offer them at by far the lowest price we have ever known to be quoted on any kind of a reliable bottle of this nature.

FIGHT IN WEST TO BRING DORR HERE

Lynn Officers to Go to California to Get Marsh Case Suspect.

Within a few days the Lynn officers will be in California and will start to secure William A. Dorr, wanted here in connection with the murder of Frederick L. Marsh, whose body was found in the woods of Lynn and all other attempts to bring him to Massachusetts have failed.

Inspector Thomas Hayden and Officer Kane of the Lynn police are on their way to Chicago, and from there they will proceed to Los Angeles, where they will confer with the chief of police there and will then go to San Diego, where they will endeavor to locate Dorr. It is believed that Dorr is in a nearby section of Mexico, and it is thought that he has crossed the line with certain pheasants

Harvard Class to Hold Real Barbecue

Only Members of '12 to Be Admitted to Hear the Band on Soldiers' Field.

The first barbecue ever to be held by a Harvard class will be held Wednesday evening, May 1, in the big stadium at Soldiers Field, with the girl of the full moon, a irrepressible boodle and a brass band. The affair will be open only to members of the class of 1912. According to the advance notices by the class committee the hungry students will be fed with roast steers and loaves of bread.

The bonfire will probably be built in the centre of the football field. One of the attractions promises to be the presence of Carmen, a sleek madam of the male family.

The committee in charge of the barbecue has given out several notices. Two of these are "Bring knives and loosen change" and "Wear old clothes."

ARE YOU GETTING THE RIGHT GOODS?

Every man and woman who buys clothes for their family or goods for their household wants the best goods. If they buy goods on "credit" from the regular "credit houses" they will be obliged to pay exorbitant prices for ordinary or inferior goods

By our system of "cash orders" issued on any store in Boston, every deserving man and woman can get just the goods they want at the regular prices—a double advantage. Open an account any time. Pay a little each week.

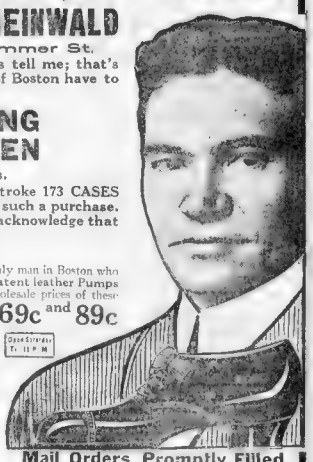
The Most Remarkable Shoe Announcement and Sale I Have Ever Put Before the Public

AND I AM GOING TO ASK YOU TO READ EVERY WORD!—WILLIAM SHEINWALD

40 Summer St.

Without doubt I am the object of more abuse and "knocking" than any other shoe merchant in all America. That's what drummers tell me; that's what my customers say; that's what my friends tell me. And it is high time that I TELL THE PUBLIC just exactly why the shoe retailers of Boston have to excuse their inability to meet my prices by "knocking." And to further emphasize the facts of this announcement



I OFFER $1000 IN GOLD TO ANY CHARITY IF THE FOLLOWING FACTS CAN BE SUCCESSFULLY CONTRADICTED OR DISPROVEN

Here are a few of the many instances in my daily purchasing, showing why and how I absolutely undersell any and all of my competitors.

THE CONVERSE RUBBER SHOE CO. will tell you that I was the only buyer in Boston or New England who dared to purchase at one stroke 173 CASES (12 pairs in a case) OF TENNIS AND YACHTING SHOES. There wasn't another shoe department or store in Boston with the nerve to tackle such a purchase. MY CASH LANDED THEM AT 40 SUMMER ST. for just one-half the wholesale price of TODAY. Ask your shoe dealer and he will have to acknowledge that he would have to pay $1.00 to $1.05 a pair at wholesale NOW! I am going to sell them now for 95c A PAIR AND MAKE A FAIR PROFIT!

IS IT ANY WONDER THEY HAVE TO KNOCK?

AONTHER INSTANCE:—D. A. Donavan, a very prominent shoe manufacturer of Lynn, offered [illegible] entire stock of Russia Calf high boots to the buyer who could take the entire lot at a cash price. I was the man who bought them for $2.00 a pair! Every dealer in America pays $3 for them wholesale—retailing from $4 up. I sell them, per pair, for..... 2.45

Is it any wonder the shoe dealers knock?

ANOTHER INSTANCE:—S. Rosenberg of Boston found that I was the only man in Boston who could have 1700 pairs of Children's Goodyear welt gun metal and patent leather Pumps and that I was the only buyer to whom he could dispose of them. The wholesale prices of these goods are $1.20 and $1.40 a pair, retailing at $2.00 and $2.25. My offer was 50c a pair cash—and I got them! Come here and buy them for, per pair... 69c and 89c

Is it any wonder the shoe dealers knock?

AND, TO CROWN IT ALL, in the rear of my big store you will find 1100 PAIRS of the famous HANNAH Oxfords and Pumps for women, in every style of the season. Every pair retails regularly at $3.50 and $4.00—By another cash transaction I bought them to be sold at, a pair $1.29

WHY WILLIAMS IS ANTI-GOV. WILSON

Insulting References to Bryan an Affront to Millions of the Nebraskan's Followers.

Former Congressman George Fred Williams, recognized throughout the land as the foremost New England follower of William Jennings Bryan, made plain last night in a letter to Democrats throughout the country, the resentment of Woodrow Wilson and favoring the nomination of Speaker Clark. This is Mr. Williams' letter

Governor Wilson at Tremont Temple last night made the statement that "Mr. Williams has no idea when the position that he will not stand by anybody, even his old friend Mr. Bryan, now seems to occupy."

I [illegible] Governor Wilson's statement, and I am grieved from the bottom of my heart.

When in Nebraska I urged upon the Democrats in that state to instruct Mr. Bryan as a delegate for Champ Clark, so that, after eight years of loyal co-operation with Mr. Bryan, he [illegible] should be used in securing all these purposes.

With respect to the primary, my position was the opposite of that which Governor Wilson takes [illegible]

I [illegible] that I should [illegible] Democrats [illegible] Democratic [illegible] Democrats of Massachusetts [illegible] support Mr. Wilson [illegible] Democrats that they [illegible] Democratic [illegible] Democrats [illegible] Democrats [illegible] Democrats

"More!—More!!"

There has never been a season when the demand for Goodrich Tires did not exceed by thousands the utmost capacity of our factories . . . Every year the demand has outstripped even the increases which we anticipated and tried to provide for. This year we have met the issue by a which will enable us to care for dealers and users to the fullest extent.

GOODRICH TIRES

have always supplied a natural, unforced, intelligent demand—caused solely by the service which these tires give to users.

Increasing every year on account of the cheerful testimony of satisfaction which Goodrich Tire users give to other users.

Such a demand concerns itself very little with technical talking points—but it is mightily interested in the answers to straight forward questions like:—"did your tires wear well?" and:—how did the Goodrich Company treat you?"

To have the confidence and support of a vast body of intelligent, experienced consumers is our best asset. And it's your most positive assurance of real tire value.

Goodrich Tires are the original American Clincher,—the tire with the White Tough Tread.
All styles to fit all rims, to suit all purposes.

TRADE MARK

Supplied by one hundred branches and service stations; the most complete system ever established to care for tire dealers and tire users after sale.

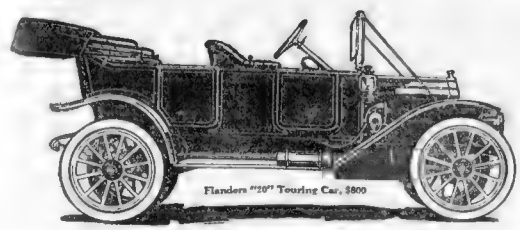
Studebaker Automobiles



What Factors Do You Consider When Selecting a Motor Car?

IT'S MIGHTY IMPORTANT—this matter of selecting an automobile. Of course every buyer knows that. But not every one knows how to go about it to determine just which car from among the many offered for his consideration, will meet his requirements and afford him the satisfaction he so devoutly hopes for afterward.

ARE YOU ONE OF THOSE who ask about the horse power, the hill climbing ability, the riding qualities; look it over and approve of the general appearance, then ask the price—and think you have covered the whole ground?

IF YOU ARE, then you may be satisfied with your purchase a few months hence. We say you may—if you are lucky. Otherwise you will realize all too late that the points mentioned, while important, are to be had in almost any automobile nowadays and are not after all, the most vital factors to consider.

IF WE WERE ASKED to select from among all the cars on the market to-day, and they were all lined up in a row for our critical inspection we would be as much at sea as you are but that we know some things about automobiles and their manufacture and their career after they leave the factory that you, a layman, cannot possibly know. And we are anxious to give you the benefit of that knowledge.

BUT AFTER SEEING THEM—noting points of contrast and of agreement in design, finish, et cetera, we would ask some other questions—and note very carefully the replies.

LET US ADMIT before going any further, that we are prejudiced. Prejudiced in favor of the Studebaker product. Prejudiced in its favor because we know how it is made. Know more about its good points than you or any one else can possibly know—because we know as you can't know, how sincerely we try to build the best automobiles possible—to give Studebaker customers the best value for the money.

WE'D LOOK 'EM ALL OVER—first. Naturally. And correctly. The buyer owes it to himself to see all really reputable cars and compare them point for point. Compare points of contrast—and features in which the several cars agree. (Of course, we would exclude—that is to say, ignore—the experiments. The new and untried models. We would consider only cars backed by reputations of long standing, for, aside from your own judgment, based as it must be on a merely superficial and brief examination and demonstration, you really have nothing to depend upon but the reputation back of the car.)

WE WOULD STUDY THE DESIGN—see if it corresponded with the best standard practice. Appearance would appeal to us, of course. One likes to own a car that looks more than he paid for it. Some look less you know—and the majority look par at most.

WE WOULD RIDE IN IT—have a demonstration as they say. And, while we would watch the performance of the motor, transmission and the car generally, very closely during that ride, we would not attach to it more importance than it deserved. For any car especially tuned up for the occasion and in the hands of a resourceful driver will do almost unheard-of stunts. That fools lots of otherwise astute prospects.

BUT AFTER ALL THAT—after considering the factors that any tyro would naturally take into account—we would ask some other and more pointed questions. Questions that would stump eight out of every ten salesmen—and perjure another tenth of them to answer to our satisfaction.

WE WOULD ASK FIRST who made the car. Not who made the motor, axles and other parts. Not who assembled them and put his name-plate on the finished product, but who actually made every part of the car from the raw materials to the completed car. And we would exclude from further consideration all "assembled" automobiles.

THEN WE WOULD WANT TO KNOW just how many automobiles each manufacturer made per annum. For the answer to that question is the answer to that other "Is it built or is it manufactured?" If made in small quantities—say less than 5,000 per year—then hand work must of necessity enter largely into its making. And we would not buy a hand-made automobile. The hand cannot approximate the accuracy of the machine. No two workmen do work of equal quality. A hand made machine means one mistake made to fit another—for perfection is impossible by hand.

SO WE WOULD EXCLUDE from our consideration those cars made in small numbers; for the following reasons: First, cars made in quantities are better because methods are possible in quantity production that are impossible when making small numbers. And second: we would know that parts of cars made in small quantities would not be absolutely interchangeable, whereas parts of machines made in immense quantities must be—necessarily.

NOW WE HAVE REDUCED the cars we would consider to a very small number. (You see, we would select our automobile by the simple process of elimination.)

HAVING ASCERTAINED these things, we would proceed to the still more important points in the selection of our automobile. We would ask for a list of owners in our own town—our own neighbors and acquaintances, and friends of our friends. And we would see them all personally. Ask about the car; how it performed on the different kinds of roads and in varying weather. Ask about its power and dependability. And finally we would inquire carefully as to the treatment accorded each customer by the manufacturer or his agent.

SPEAKING OF AGENTS: (Dealer is the better term.) We would go further and ask whether, back of the local dealer was a branch or merely a jobber. A jobber, you know handles a certain product this season. This season. Get that? Next season he may, and probably will be handling a competing car. It will be necessary—or he will think so—to "knock" the one he is selling now. And the easiest way to do that is to neglect it and its buyer.

ONE CONCERN—STUDEBAKERS to be exact—have thirty-six branch houses located in as many important distributing centers all over this continent—Canada as well as the U. S. (There we go again! Constantly reverting to ourselves. And when we are trying so hard to be impartial, too!)

NOW WE HAVE ELIMINATED ALL but three or four cars from our further consideration. We are speaking now of cars in the price-class of Flanders "20" and E-M-F "30" which is to say, cars selling from $1600 down to $800.

PRICE OF FLANDERS "20" IS $800 at the factory and of course there is no other car at a lower or even at that price that compares with this wonderful car at all. And though E-M-F "30" sells for only $1100 you will find it is damned by all dealers selling cars up to $1600. In other words it is their strongest competitor, just as Flanders "20" is the bete noir of dealers who have $900 and $1000 cars to sell and who have to argue that they are just as good as Flanders "20."

THAT REMINDS US. Recently we heard of two ingenious ways to make the rival dealer tell, between the lines as it were, which cars he really considered best. Here they are:

ONE RESOURCEFUL BUYER made it a practice to watch, while he talked with the various dealers, and see which car they all knocked. He says the first car they attack is invariably the one that pushes them hardest in competition. He bought an E-M-F "30." (But, of course, that is aside from the story.)

THE OTHER, A PSYCHOLOGIST adopted this plan. He assumed that the car he was looking at was the best in the world—to avoid argument with the salesman. Then he asked which car the salesman considered next best.

HE BOUGHT A FLANDERS "20"—now this isn't prejudice. It is fact.

WELL, WHAT HAVE WE LEFT after eliminating the cars that cannot measure up to the standards we have set—standards which are the only safe ones on which to base a purchase that involves as much money and means so much in pleasure, or the reverse, as does the selection of an automobile.

WE HAVE STUDEBAKER CARS—Flanders "20" and E-M-F "30" each in its own distinct class. And we have only these because—because in addition to passing all the tests enumerated with 100 per cent to their credit, they possess that additional advantage which no other cars enjoy—they are backed by the name and the reputation of Studebakers.

WE HOPE WE HAVE HELPED YOU to select the right car. The one that will give you the most for your money in the first place and the most service and satisfaction at the least cost afterwards. If you apply all the tests we have suggested your decision will be the same as ours—Studebaker "20" or "30"—according to your needs and your means.

JUST A WORD ABOUT DELIVERIES. We receive many letters from good friends in about this wise: "Would order a Flanders "20" but competitors tell me you are so heavily oversold I may not get it till July. Tell me the real situation." Here's our reply:

WE WARNED YOU in our last ad that tardy buyers would undoubtedly be disappointed. We cannot alter that now. Tried to get ahead of orders in April but, bad as the weather was we only managed to keep abreast. Can't hope to do more in May. But that doesn't affect buyers who are alert to the condition. Only the tardy ones will get left. You can get a car—if you hurry. See your local dealer to-day and he can most likely fix you up for an early delivery. And if you doubt his promise just drop a line to us at the factory and we will tell you whether he can positively guarantee you a car on the date he says. Nine times out of ten he is telling you the truth—that's the kind of dealers we have mostly. But don't delay.

Proper Brakes and Their Right Application Means Everything to a Car Owner

In the early days of [illegible] difficulty was not [illegible] in starting [illegible] and [illegible] were [illegible] this manufacturer [illegible] on the [illegible] engine [illegible] very [illegible] way [illegible]

Many of the earliest [illegible] brake [illegible] brakes [illegible] power [illegible] later [illegible] when [illegible] throw [illegible] do, the [illegible] designers [illegible] and [illegible] braking [illegible] operation. As long [illegible] brakes [illegible] any [illegible] cars at [illegible] when [illegible] when [illegible] not be [illegible] the car of a car starting to [illegible] hill. And as the [illegible] it was shown began to get the reputation that it deserved.

Good [illegible] next demanded brakes which [illegible] tried [illegible] the rear [illegible] shoe acting on the [illegible] when [illegible] applied [illegible] by steering [illegible]

One of the most [illegible] signed [illegible] this type was [illegible] type consisting of a [illegible] at one end [illegible] application [illegible] was [illegible] drum [illegible] quently [illegible] side [illegible] vantage [illegible] cent [illegible] great [illegible] it is [illegible] other [illegible] action [illegible] could not [illegible] slightest [illegible] start [illegible] a considerable [illegible] to [illegible] effective [illegible] but have the [illegible] mentioned.

Shoe brakes then had a [illegible] vogue, but the lining used was [illegible] to cause a disagreeable [illegible] the car was [illegible] eventually [illegible] on account of which [illegible] make as [illegible] with a [illegible] President F. The Power of the Acetylene Lamp

Use of Peroxide of Hydrogen Said to Add 50 Per Cent. to Its Candle Power.

In the last issue of The Autocar particulars were given of some tests by Mr A. E. Mayes of [illegible] of hydrogen (H2O2) in the [illegible] lamps. It was [illegible] to mix a certain [illegible] of water [illegible] with [illegible] power by 50 per cent. The following communicates with regard to H2O2 may, therefore, not be without interest.

Peroxide of hydrogen is purchased from the chemist should be dispensed in a [illegible] stoppered bottle, or if an ordinary white glass bottle is used it ought to exclude the light, and [illegible] stored in a dark cool place.

The formula shows that peroxide of hydrogen is [illegible] water with a [illegible] amount of oxygen at the moment of production—just and light, for example—[illegible] 20 volumes has a reaction on the skin, so that care [illegible] be exercised in handling it; it also has the property of [illegible] strength. The Autocar

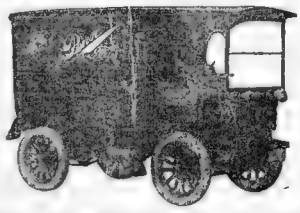
"Used in Every Line of Business"



One of the Many Autocars Seen on Boston Streets

Have you given careful study to the improvement of your transportation and delivery service?

The Autocar Commercial Vehicle has demonstrated its value to hundreds of merchants who would not now be without it. MORE THAN 600 CONCERNS, IN FACT, HAVE ADOPTED OUR CAR, OWNING FROM ONE TO SEVENTY EACH

These concerns are conveying their merchandise in Autocars through crowded streets or from city stores to country districts—and are doing it more quickly, more economically and more profitably than they ever did with horse-drawn vehicles

Sixty per cent. of all our sales are REPEAT ORDERS. This speaks of the satisfaction of Autocar owners.

The Choice of the Majority

¶ There are more Overland cars being bought to-day than any other similar type of car produced. We average five sales to the other makers' one. Have you ever stopped to figure this out? Has the full force of this significant fact been brought home to you? Do you imagine we are selling more merely because we are making more?

¶ We are marketing the greatest number of cars purely and simply because we can give more for a dollar than any other manufacturer in the business.

¶ The greatest number of people to-day who are buying high grade popular priced cars are chosing the Overland. Figures prove this. Does it not occur to your sense of reasoning that this vast majority of shrewd buyers cannot be wrong?

¶ The unparalleled value of this car has moved the motor buying public of every civilized country under the sun. The response is world wide. What better guide can you have as to how to get the best and most for the least amount of money?

¶ The exceptional worth of this car has been proven. Not in any one way, but in a thousand different and distinct ways. Yet there is but one big practical reason why you should buy an Overland. Its purchase gives you more actual car value for less actual money than you can get from any other manufacturer in the world.

¶ The only apparent and practical difference in popular priced cars to-day is the difference in price, and this is entirely due to the wide difference in the size of the plants that produce them. A comparison of current market prices places this evidence in your own hands. By that we mean just this: Take our magnificent, powerful Model 60—shown here. This car is priced at $1200. By actual comparison you will find this car the duplicate of any other $1500 car made. To be more specific—it has the power, the speed, the seating capacity, the wheel base, the construction, the bearings, the comfort and finish and on top of that it will give better and longer service.

¶ The value of a car can be justly judged by the demand for it. We are the largest producers of thirty, thirty-five and forty-five horse-power cars in the industry. The public have forced this condition. We never have been able to supply the demand. This year we will make 25,000 cars. Right now we are shipping 125 cars a day. We have over 2000 immediate orders on hand. It is not unusual for us to find three to four hundred shipping orders in one morning's mail. We export more cars each year than the entire annual output of any automobile plant in Europe. This gives you some idea of our tremendous capacity.

¶ Model 60 is a thirty-five horse-power, five-passenger touring car. It is big, handsome, powerful, comfortable and efficient. It will give you years of service. According to the run of market prices, it is a $1500 car for $1200. In order to get this much value for $1200 you must buy an Overland "60" or pay at least $1500 for some other make. Which shall it be? See our dealer below and decide early. Handsome catalog on request.

"The Timid Don't Attain the Top."

By HERBERT KAUFMAN.

Copyright, 1912, by Herbert Kaufman.

Most plans fail because they are [illegible] they are thought out. Risk is a case in point. The timid do not attain the top. The day will never dawn when inefficiency and doubt will produce the same results as industry and daring. No form of government can guarantee to the individual more than he pledges to himself. Equality, except among those who coolly persist, is a ridiculous and futile concept. A system cannot be devised to reduce humanity to a common denominator. Even with all roads open to all goals and every man privileged to rise without hindrance and without handicap, the ambitious, the eager, the dogged and the dauntless today, as in every yesterday, continue to outdistance the careless, the bigoted, the hesitating and the lazy. Demagogues may outbellow the thunder—sophists stage the most adept illusions—fools bray themselves hoarse, but this truth is invulnerable, this fact remains unalterable; superiority ever asserts itself.

Progress without a definite and traceable cause is incomprehensible.

Investigation inevitably develops a competent and logical reason for growth.

A rare prank of circumstance occasionally violates without invalidating some fixed rule of life, but 999 times in 1,000 instances the man constantly at the foot of the ladder lacks the sand or the sense to mount it.

The prospect of the betterment without striving is a mirage, a dream that can't come true.

Your welfare is a personal obligation. You and you alone must be the guide, guardian and champion of your interests.

The instant you [illegible] the moment you live the [illegible] with your ideals somebody more determined [illegible] what you have, or have in view, will wreck you or drive you.

Yes, there are thieves and they do prey—but theft is impossible in the face of vigilance.

Of course there are swindlers—but [illegible] who investigate before they invest.

Wrong cannot possibly flourish where it is [illegible]

With caution, courage, self-respect, industry and will as allies, who or what can withstand you?

"But," you cry, "I am physically inferior." Then seek inspiration from the examples set by blind Milton and puny Alexander Stephens, and deaf, dumb, sightless Helen Keller.

"But," you plead, "I am not educated."

Neither were Lincoln and Johnson, who tutored themselves into the White House. Nor was Franklin, the chandler's son, nor was Edison, the train butcher.

But you whine, "I lack capital." The good workman demands but tools and you are equipped. Your mind and your hands are unimpaired. Laboring and thinking created all the capital on earth.

Figure it any way you like—you can't dodge this—you are responsible for your failures.

Search for the weak spots in your makeup and you will see fewer flaws in the scheme of creation.

Criticism like charity should begin at home. Depend on it, if you have deluded yourself with the idea that the world is wrong, it is only because the world found you wrong first.

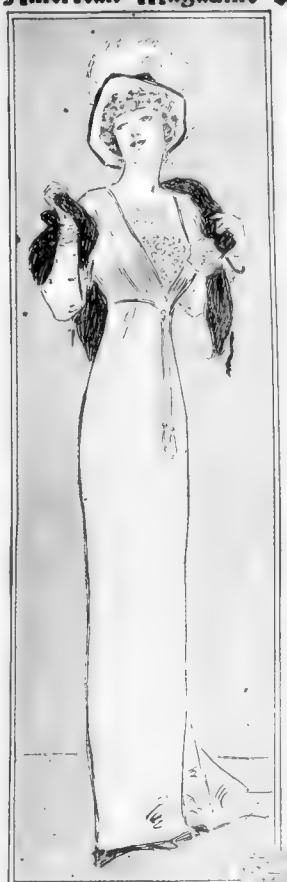
No. 4—Taking Care of Uncle



"Hello, Uncle Abel! Here's me! Here's your little ray of sunshine."

"HELLO, Uncle Abel! Here's me! Here's your little ray of sunshine. Aunt Hetty sprung a C. Q. D. at me over the telephone and said she had to go to a meeting of some Hen's Club or other, and would I come around here and sit with you. So I came just as soon as I could skittle over. You poor dear, are you awfully tired of staying in the house? Well, I suppose gout is annoying. Why don't you try Mental Science? They say it's fine! You know, you just think you haven't any gout, and then you don't have any! Though, for that matter, you might as well think you hadn't any feet."

"And then, wouldn't I have any?"

"No, I suppose not. But that wouldn't do any good, because I've heard that soldiers, or any people with their feet cut off, feel them hurting just the same. But, never mind, my poor darling, I'm going to be so entertaining this afternoon that you won't know whether you have any feet or not."

"Entertaining, hey? I suppose that means you'll chatter like a confounded magpie till I'm nearly crazy. I don't see why women have to be eternally talking!"

"There, there, Uncle Abel, your foot is bad to-day, isn't it? Aunt Hetty said you were as cross as a teething baby"——

"Oh, she said that, did she?"

"Yes, and she said she hoped to goodness I could check you up some, for she'd just about reached the end of her patience!"

"Pooh! She never had any patience! Now, if she were in my plight—full of chronic hereditary gout, and just getting over the gripper"——

"Well, you ought to be thankful it isn't chronic, hereditary gripped! But men can't stand a bit of discomfort!"

"Confound your impertinence, Miss! What are you talking about? I don't know what your aunt meant by getting you over here this afternoon! You've no more feeling or sympathy than a Dutch doll!"

"Oh, yes I have, Uncle dear! Here, I'll rest your foot in an easier position. ——

"Oo! E—E' ouch! Gosh, Lilly! I wish I had something to throw at you! Get away, girl!"

"Oh, I'm so sorry for your poor, dear, suffering old wrapped-up bundle of foot! Here, let me put another sofa cushion under it. Say, Uncle, I saw the loveliest burnt leather sofa-pillow in Van Style's window as I came along! It would suit my room beautifully. There, there, dear, let me rub your forehead with this cologne; isn't that soothing?"

"Soothing nothing! You've abused it all in my eyes, too—smart like fire! Oo, ouch! Lilly, get out!"

"Well, try that mental solace again. Think they don't smart. Think you haven't any eyes!"

"I wish I hadn't any ears! Do stop chattering, Lilly!"

"My! Aunt Hetty sized up your state of mind all right, didn't she? Well, Uncle, I guess I'll read to you. Here's a lovely story in this new magazine. Listen: 'The pale young man feebly regarded me as I looked at her. "Forgive me, unmarried, unacquainted, you are so adorably sublime, so tragically interesting, that I feel—I feel——"'"

"I suppose I know how that young man felt! Shut up that fool book, Lilly! If you must read, read me some Wall Street news."

"All right, Uncle Abel, here goes. 'I'll read from the morning paper.' 'Coffee certified rail.' 'Steel rail changes' 'Steel rail changes' Why, how funny! What was the meaning? A sort of a code of signs? And I suppose coffee, why did they do so sharply? Why, let say, 'No, thank you,' and take tea?'

"I don't want that column; turn to 'Gossip of Wall Street.'"

"Yes I see that is. But, Uncle, do the magnates and things gossip? I thought it was a woman's trick! Well, here we are: 'Steel rail changes discussed all day!' Oh, Uncle, and then to call women chatterboxes! When men talk all day long about a foolish little thing like changing a steel rail! Why, I can change a whole hat in less time than that! Say, Uncle, there was the dearest hat in the Featherton's window"——

"I'll bet it was dear if it was in that shop!'

"Well, but it had been reduced; marked down to $27.99. Such a bargain! Uncle, you know my birthday comes next week"——

"Well, which do you want, the hat or the sofa-pillow you hinted for a while ago?"

"Oh, Uncle, how lovely of you! But it's so hard to choose between them. Suppose I had them both sent home on approval—and then I can see"——

"Yes, I know what that means!"

"Oh, here comes the maid, with your beef tea. No, Jane, let me take it, I'll give it to him. You may go, Jane. I'll just taste this, Uncle, to be sure it isn't too hot for you. Oh, how good it is! I've often thought I'd like to be an invalid just on account of the lovely things they get to eat. Why, this beef tea is delicious! And such a pretty cup and saucer. Do you know, Ethel Wylie has a whole set like this. 'Coalport,' isn't it? Say, Uncle, what do you think about the coal strike? Do tell me all about it—I'm shockingly ignorant of politics. Do they call it a strike because the men get mad and strike each other? Or what?"

"Lilly, if you don't want all that beef tea, I believe I could relish a little."

"Oh, Uncle, how thoughtless of me! I've sipped nearly all of it! I suppose I sort of thought I was at a tea. But I think there's as much as you ought to take. Dear Uncle, it's so nice to see you eat something nourishing. I'm sure it will do you good. It must be awful to have the grippe. And you have headache, haven't you? Now, don't say no—I can see it in your poor, dear eyes. I'm going to tie this wet bandage round your forehead—so—oh, so, it isn't dripping down your neck—it can't be. Well, it will soon stop. Now I'll rub this menthol on the bridge of your nose—now, now, Uncle, don't scowl, like that. If you won't try mental science we must use remedies."

"Lilly, if you don't let me alone I'll throw this cup and saucer at you!"

"Oh, Uncle, dear, don't be so peevish! There, now, I'll pat your poor foot and sing to you."

"Oooh! Oh, the devil! Lilly, get out! There!!

"Oh, Uncle, you've smashed that lovely 'Coalport!' Did those gentle little pats hurt your foot? I don't believe it! I declare a man is worse to take care of than a baby! Thank goodness, here comes Aunt Hetty!"

"How thoughtless! I've sipped nearly all of it."

"I declare a man is worse to take care of than a baby! Thank goodness, here comes Aunt Hetty!"

NEW DISCOVERIES ALL OVER THE EARTH

Why You Should "DRESS UP" and SMILE While Eating.

"A well-laid table and correct dress help to excite 'appetite juices'."

SOME of the remarkable experiments upon the digestive glands of [illegible] I. P. Pavlov, director of the Imperial Institute of Medicine at St. Petersburg, were described in this newspaper a few weeks ago.

Professor Pavlor disconnected the gullet of a dog so that food put in the animal's mouth fell out of a tube without going to its stomach, while he ran another tube into the stomach through which the digestive juices could be drawn uncontaminated by food. He found that the passage of the food through the mouth stimulated the appetite glands of [illegible] to the stomach. The [illegible] confirmed hundreds of experiments using these two [illegible] gastric juice at a l

From this the further important conclusion for human beings follows that appetite is absolutely essential to good digestion. The flow of digestive juices aroused by [illegible] Juice. This [illegible] appreciated by common people. [illegible] have discarded [illegible] by [illegible] chemists.

Science, therefore, teaches us that we must eat with attention and enjoyment [illegible] able, if worse comes to worst, [illegible] some people, set prayers, all help to excite "appetite juice."

These formal surroundings put a person in an eating frame of mind and drive away other thoughts. The same amount of equally good food, taken amid a man's [illegible] this was so, and now we know it is the [illegible] Pavlov's experiments why it is so.

Heated discussions and serious reading must be avoided while you are eating, because they hold back digestion through the nervous system. A dog's digestive juice was observed to flow freely at the sight of food, but when another dog was allowed to eat its food while the first was restrained, its gastric juice stopped flowing.

[illegible] be subdued by substituting pleasant [illegible] every other form of eating, whether by force, persuasion or [illegible]

[illegible] must first restore appetite. It was found that small portions of food given to a dog repeatedly excited more and much stronger digestive fluid than when the whole ration was given at one time. This indicates one of the secretions must not be overstimulated.

In indigestion the mucous surface of the stomach is frequently diseased so that it fails to respond to normal stimulation. In such cases a strong peptic excitation, that is, a keen feeling of appetite excited through the nerve centres, will evoke a secretory impulse in the [illegible] glands, which lie in the deeper and as yet uninjured layers of the mucous membrane of the stomach.

The experiments teach doctors that they should restore the victim of long continued chronic dyspepsia [illegible] his customary surroundings in order to excite [illegible] the right mood [illegible] to take his ill habits off his [illegible]. He pays no attention to what he eats, and, therefore, he doesn't digest [illegible] and produces no "appetite juice."

The food remains too long in his digestive canal, [illegible] and causes disease. No medicine can help him. The only thing to do is take him away from [illegible]

[illegible] Professor relates [illegible] of a dog whose stomach was [illegible] surviving auxiliary secretion [illegible] and may be [illegible] after [illegible] has not yet been [illegible] and has been [illegible] Pavlov introduced [illegible] of a dog whose passage [illegible] it [illegible] provoked no secretion. A $15,000,000 Heiress's Ideal

Even the Poorest Girl Always Knows Just the Kind of Man She's Going to Marry—

Here Is Beautiful, Rich Miss Lilla Gilbert's Interesting Ideal

Here It Is! Are You it?

He Must Be— Six feet tall, and fond of athletics, a brunette, a good rider and fond of animals, clean-shaven with a firm jaw, and ears close to his head, an Episcopalian and a Republican, AND A MONEY-MAKER.

He Must Have— Thick hair curled over his left ear with no red in it, a straight nose; large and intelligent eyes, but not bright ones, because no one with bright eyes is a money-maker; modern ideas on the raising of pigs and poultry.

He Must— Love lemon with his tea and eat ice-cream with a fork, like Robert Chambers' stories and Kismet, dance the Turkey Trot and wear his clothes like John Drew does, swear like a gentleman and be gentlemanly even in his cups.

He Must Not— Wear pink neckties and jewelry, ever have been REALLY in love.

TIME TO PROVE IT—25 HOURS 3 MINUTES.

"How much better it would be if every girl would carefully formulate her ideal and then paste it up prominently where the right man could come along and see it. What a lot of trouble and disappointment would be saved!"

NEW PHOTOGRAPHS OF FRESH DISCOVERIES AT POMPEII ~

On the Right Is a Remarkable Photograph of "The Man on the Branch." Just Uncovered at Pompeii. Above Is Shown How 2,000 Years Ago During the Destruction of Pompeii This Man Climbed a Tree to Escape the Torrents of Boiling Mud and Ashes Pouring Over and Through the City. The Branch Broke and the Man Fell to Be Uncovered Centuries Later, His Death Agony Preserved and His Knees Still Clutching the Broken Piece of Wood.

THIS newspaper has already described the recent discoveries at Pompeii, the most remarkable and interesting, perhaps, which have ever been made in that accidental buried city of the past.

These discoveries were made in a house in street of Abundance, a street which, though previously known, had never been extensively excavated. It has proved to be a true Fifth avenue of ancient Pompeii, a thoroughfare as splendid, as luxurious, as [illegible], as [illegible] as New York's Fifth avenue of to-day, and in many ways more sensual, cruel and brutal.

We have now received a series of photographs of the most interesting objects recovered in the new excavations from a correspondent at Naples, who holds a high position in university circles. The Italian government jealously guards the right to photograph objects recovered at Pompeii and it was only by special permission of the government that the accompanying pictures could be obtained.

These photographs are in a three-volume work [illegible] of the most interesting [illegible] during the [illegible] of Pompeii [illegible] and back from Naples in the year [illegible] A. D.

One picture in particular shows us the [illegible] of a man who was trying to flee from the [illegible] and is pressed to death by the [illegible] of the [illegible] of his own house. This man, one of the richest residents of the street of Abundance, and his family. Here we see the head of the family and his wife, both huddled together in a last pitiful embrace.

There lie two little girls, presumably daughters of the family, also clinging together in a death embrace. A little apart lie the bodies of two men who are supposed to be [illegible] servants. These skeletons are lying in the [illegible] of the atrium or hall way of the palace of Obellius Firmus. They had evidently waited in the [illegible] of the house until it fell in and then had been overcome with fumes and then had been overcome in attempting to flee. They are to be left as they were found.

Of equal interest to this discovery in that of the man clinging to the limb of a tree, also shown in a photograph. That poor fellow must have found that the ground was [illegible] covered with hot ashes and mud to a great depth.

Unable to run through, he sought the only means of refuge he could see. He climbed up a tree. There he clung until the branch broke and he fell, clinging frantically in his death agony to his faithless refuge, to be gathered in the viscid torrent below him. The mud hardened around his body, encasing it, so that, to-day, twenty centuries later, his death agony is preserved in the form shown in the photograph.

Another photograph throws light on the religious life of Pompeii. At the corner of a street leading from the Street of Abundance there was found a large and handsome fresco representing [illegible] chief divinities of Olympus [illegible] very charming [illegible] sacrificing to the Lares, or household gods of the family. [illegible] pagan divinities helped the Pompeians in that dreadful time!

In another photograph we see the remains of a "thermopolium," or drinking saloon, of ancient Pompeii. Here are all the wine jars and cups and other accompaniments of drinking.

The many interesting discoveries made in the drinking saloon include a complete apparatus for boiling wine, water and every sort [illegible] of [illegible] mentioned. In the photograph [illegible] appears [illegible] a kind contrivance [illegible] so arranged that it could not be used [illegible] another and [illegible] sweet. Near [illegible] a [illegible] through which the steam from the fire escaped.

In front of the official [illegible] [illegible] water was found to [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

Imaginary Exploits of "Sherlock Holmes" Outdo

By William J. Burn
The Most Famous American D

This Drawing Shows How a Handprint on a Hat Told Dr. Gross, the German Criminologist, That the Murderer He Sought Was a Working Jeweller. The Wide White Lines on the Palm Are Caused by His Habit of Stopping His Polishing and Finishing Wheel with His Hand. The Little Scars on the Finger Are Produced by Cuts from the Same Wheel. The Marks Are "Occupational" Marks, Which Tell the Employment of the Hand's Owner.

IT is, perhaps, not surprising that very wide-spread interest has been aroused by the use of the interesting little scientific instrument called the dictagraph, which I employed in connection with the McNamara dynamiting cases and elsewhere. The dictagraph is only one instance of the usefulness of modern science in detective work. The successful detection of crime has now largely passed out of the old system of haphazard guesswork, and is shaping itself along the lines of more strictly scientific study.

The recent progress of the professional criminologists of France and Germany is little understood in America, where very few detectives avail themselves of these new resources of science.

I am making a conservative statement when

IN last week's instalment of this series of articles upon the new, exact science of criminal catching four remarkable cases were detailed. In case D was told the methods by which Dr. Lacassagne overturned the stratagem of a murderer by his discovery of bullock's blood crystals and a hand print in case E was told how Dr. Frecon, another French criminologist, discovered how an old coin collector's valet had hidden $50 000 worth of ancient coins in the soles of his shoes. Case F told how Professor Reiss of Lausanne University, told from a blood-stained towel and a railroad ticket that soldiers had murdered Madame Guldin. In case G the grisly story of the vampire murderer, of Berlin, and how Dr. Gross, the great German expert, discovered him by finding in some blood stains the germs of sleeping sickness was related

The subject of blood tests is enormously wide. Not only can the germs of disease be found; not only can it be told whether the blood stain under study came from man, woman, child, bird, beast or reptile, but the refinements of the laboratory can even detect traces left in the blood by inhalation of subtle poisons and anesthetics. There is a machine which counts the number of corpuscles in blood The normal number of red corpuscles in a cubic millimeter of human blood is 4,500,000. A cubic millimeter in terms of inches is 6 100,000 of a cubic inch. The inhalation of some gases through the lungs produces peculiar effects upon the red corpuscles. Nitrous oxide has the peculiar faculty of at once increasing the production of the red corpuscles by the body and doubling them. So a person who has been made insensible by nitrous oxide will for many hours, and indeed days, carry about an abnormal increased number of red corpuscles in the blood How this test was used is told in case J on this page.

Even if he could deduce nothing from the impression of a shoenail the scientific detective would learn much from the general aspect of a footprint. A woman's footprint is different from a man's; a boy's from an adult's. Incredible as it may seem, Lacassagne, a famous French student of crime, claims that he can tell from a footprint whether a man is afflicted with consumption, typhoid, nervousness and other diseases; but the incredible becomes credible when he explains that illness affects a man's gait as well as his physiognomy. The fact that a man's foot bears a certain relation to his height has enabled De Parville and Frecon, two names well known in the annals of criminology, to frame a mathematical formula by means of which a detective can determine a criminal's height from the print of his naked foot.

But, you ask, do criminals walk about in naked feet? Even an unscientific detective knows that they do. Why? Simply to move about noiselessly. More often only the shoes are removed. But the imprint of a stocking may be as significant as the imprint of a bootnail. A Viennese sneak thief who pottered about on a freshly shellacked hardwood floor was neatly caught by a detective of the modern school after an examination of the impression of the socks. "Look for a man who wears good clothes and is fond of luxury," he told the police. What made him say that? The impression on the shellacked floor was the impression of a silk sock. Six of the best-dressed sneak thieves of Vienna were arrested. Five proved alibis. The sixth eventually confessed

In Baden-Baden the famous Dr. Weingart unravelled the theft of $1,000,000 worth of emeralds by a series of deductions, in which the prints of a woollen stocking-covered foot and a silk stocking-covered foot on a polished floor played an important part This remarkable affair is told in detail in Case J, on this page

So, too, the mark of a tool may enable a detective to deduce the manner in which a door was forced open. The Renard-Courtois case, solved by Bertillon, is proof of that. Here are the essentials of that highly interesting story.

A banker, Remy, was murdered in June, 1908. In a room next to his bedchamber was a rolltop desk, which had been broken open. Renard and Courtois, the valet and the footman of the murdered man, were arrested. Courtois confessed, and insisted that Renard had helped him. Renard, on the other hand, stoutly maintained his innocence. To establish that guilt or innocence Bertillon studied every square inch of the desk and of the tools with which it

Case H— How the Famous Dr. Gross, of Berlin, Unravelled a Murder Mystery with One Dead Flea, One Live Ant, a Bloody Hand Print on a White Hat and Three Hairs

AT exactly thirty-six minutes after four, one-half hour before sunrise, on the morning of Wednesday, August 16, caretakers of a large amusement park just outside of Dresden found the body of a somewhat showily dressed woman lying half submerged on the shores of the shallow lake in the grounds.

She had been stabbed in the throat. It was impossible to tell from the condition of the body just how long it had been in the water. The face, through sinking in the mud, had been protected, but the woman's general appearance showed that she could not have been in the water more than a few days.

The park was much frequented by lodges, societies, clubs and private parties giving outings. The murder cast a doubt upon its safety, and at the solicitation of the proprietor the police called in Dr. Gross, the famous German criminologist, to investigate A thorough search was made of that part of the lake where the woman had been found. Marks were discovered showing where the woman had been dragged down into the lake and a white canvas cap was picked up. On the top of the hat was the perfect imprint of a bloody hand, each line showing almost as clearly as though it had been etched. The hat was not very clean; the sweat band was greasy; it had evidently been worn upon several occasions. All foot marks had been obliterated.

The resort owner told the police that there had been a picnic held in the park on Saturday night by a singing society; on Sunday night by an athletic society and on Tuesday evening by a bowling club. Almost all the members of all these clubs, he said, had worn white caps such as the one found in the thickets. There was nothing at all upon the woman in the way of letters to identify her.

Dr. Gross carried all the exhibits, including the woman's clothes, back to a room in the temporary morgue. He had with him his camera and a microscope. Later he sent his assistant to his laboratory. The assistant returned carrying with him a thin, curious instrument of steel about a foot long. A small porcelain cup was at one end.

Not half an hour later Dr. Gross returned and made the following statement:

"The murdered woman was a barefoot dancer in the Italian vaudeville company which arrived here in Dresden a week ago. She was killed on Sunday night. The murderer was a member of the athletic society which spent the day here on Sunday. He is a man between thirty and forty years of age, is inclined to be stout, has black hair which is beginning to turn gray and he is a jeweller."

The owner of the resort was skeptical. "The woman is a blonde," he said. "I know there are blonde Italians, but she is not an Italian."

"I did not say she was an Italian," said Dr. Gross. "I said she had come with them from Italy and that she was a barefoot dancer. I knew she was a barefoot dancer at first from her shoes. She wore shoes much too large for her, and a woman as showily dressed as this one would have been more apt to have worn shoes too tight. Barefoot dancers, alone among women, cannot afford to ruin their feet by wearing tight shoes. Besides an examination of the muscles of her legs and of her feet give conclusive evidence. Barefoot dancing gives a precise development that cannot be mistaken.

"But there are other dancers," said the Chief of Police.

"That does not explain, Doctor, how you come to your conclusion that she just came from Italy or was with the Italian vaudeville company."

"Oh, the flea told me that," replied Dr. Gross.

"The flea?" they chorused incredulously

"Why, yes," said Dr Gross "In my microscopic examination of her clothing I came across a dead flea. In the flounce of her dress I also found a live ant—but of that later. Now in Dresden, as you know, we have practically no fleas. But in Italy they are common; prince and pauper alike suffer from them. They are very hard to get rid of, as they have a trick of hiding in one's clothes One flea may harass a person for a week. Besides I recognize her shoes as those of a manufacturer in Milan—every shoe has its own distinctive marks either in shape, in arrangement of nails and pegs, and so on. We can tell at once from even a heel print just who the maker was. Again, the skirt is a peculiar Italian cloth made in Naples and the corset came from Rome. But all this can be settled at once by sending for a member of the company. I admit that there are other possibilities, but we must follow the weight of evidence

"I will send for the manager of the Italian company," said the Chief, "but I do not see how you can tell that she was murdered on Sunday night. The proprietor has said that there were picnics here on Saturday, Sunday and Tuesday."

"Ah," said Dr. Gross, "I have told you that I found both a dead flea and a live ant in her clothing. Now, experiments—and I tell you, my dear Chief, that these experiments are authoritative and their conclusions may be found in the reports of the Royal Scientific Society—experiments, I say, have shown that a flea cannot live more than sixteen hours in water. Therefore I know that the woman was not killed by one of the Tuesday night picnickers, as less than sixteen hours elapsed between then and the time the corpse was found

"But the ant was alive. Now, an ant lives seventy-two hours in water. There had been no picnic on Monday. If the woman had been murdered on Saturday the ant would have perished before Wednesday morning. But an ant could very well survive under water from Sunday on. Ant and flea therefore point conclusively to Sunday night as the time of the murder.

The proprietor took a pencil and a piece of paper "Let me figure that," he demanded.

"Very well; now calculate," said Dr. Gross "Put down the limit of the flea's life in water as sixteen hours; the ant's as seventy-two. How many hours had elapsed since Tuesday dusk and the time of finding the body?"

"Not more than nine," answered the park proprietor

"But the flea is dead of drowning, therefore the body must have been thrown in the water before Tuesday dusk. But the ant is alive How many hours have elapsed since dusk on Saturday night? Eighty-one hours, you say. Very well; if the body had been thrown in on Saturday the ant would have been dead. A simple matter of mathematics"

"Now, if you have a list of the members of the athletic club which was here on Sunday let us examine it and have one of your men see if there are any jewellers among them."

In the list were found the names of two jewellers.

"Let your men arrest the one whom they will find to be between thirty and forty, stout, with black hair turning gray, as I first described," said Dr. Gross.

"But before I do this please tell me how you can describe a man you have never seen," demanded the Chief of Police."

"In the cap," said Dr. Gross, "we found three hairs, two black and one gray. A microscopic examination showed me that while the gray hair contained no coloring matter in the rind, the centre did contain a great many pigment cells. There were many more than those found in the hair of old people, showing me that this man was turning prematurely gray. Hence I arrived at the age. Moreover, the outer layer of the hair showed under the microscope several warnlike protuberances. These are always due to undue excretions of perspiration, characteristic of men who are either stout or inclined to stoutness. These protuberances are indeed a common peculiarity of the hair of the fat."

"But I still do not see how you managed to tell his trade," said the Chief.

"That," said Dr. Gross, "was the easiest of all. All hair, even short hair, accumulates a certain amount of dust through the day. Thus a cabinet maker's scalp will show minute particles of wood; a carpet layer's scalp will show ordinary dust and tiny bits of worsted; a blacksmith's minute iron filings and coal particles. A jewellers' scalp will show infinitesimally small bits of metall You see the little instrument for which I sent my assistant. It is a specially made vacuum cleaner.

"I applied this to the inside of the cap. I examined the screen with the microscope afterward and found several particles of gold and silver—sufficient evidence to tell us what trade the owner pursued.

"But you will say the murderer might have borrowed the cap. Very true. And last I come to the most important piece of evidence of all—the hand mark in blood on the crown. As I reconstruct the crime the murderer after stabbing the woman dragged her to the lake. His hands became full of blood. At one point he stumbled and fell. His cap pitched from his head and he landed with one hand squarely on the crown. It is one of the incidents that prove that the laws of chance are enormously against a murderer making his escape.

"Now, just as you have occupational traces in the hair, so do you have occupational habits and occupational marks on the fine network of lines on the palm of the hand and the fingers. An occupational habit of jewellers is to stop with the fleshy inner base of the thumb the little wheel with which they cut gems or shape their gold and silver. This grinds down the tops of the little skin ridges and leaves a trail invisible to the eye but plain under the microscope. If you will look at this hand print under the glass you will see that along a line half an inch wide and an inch long the markings seem to be smoothly planed away. That is the occupational habit mark. Again, under the glass you will note on the inner side of the forefinger what appears to be tiny scars. They are just that—another occupational mark of the jeweller whose finger comes now and then in contact with his wheel and so has small bits ground away here and there. Do you accept my conclusions?"

"This," said the Chief of Police, "is truly amazing!"

"It is, after all, only common sense," answered Dr. Gross.

The Dresden police found that one of the jewellers named as members of the athletic club was between thirty and forty, with black hair turning prematurely gray. A comparison of his hand with that left on the cap showed them to be identical. The woman had been a member of the Italian company. The jeweller later confessed that he had killed her in a moment of drunken anger, and suffered the penalty of his crime.

On the left side were depressions that had been made by the carpenter's chisel. The marks of the screwdriver and the cold chisel were found only on the right side, the marks of the carpenter's chisel only on the left side.

First conclusion of Bertillon: It would be absurd to assume that, if one man alone had rifled the desk, he would have changed tools ...attacking the rolltop from alternate sides. Furthermore, the cold chisel was a better tool than the carpenter's chisel; it was stronger and longer.

The desk was so small that had one man attempted to force one side at a time the rolltop could not have been opened; the desk would have been pushed over bodily, even if placed against the wall. Second conclusion of Bertillon: The desk was laid on the floor and two men worked at it simultaneously.

The marks of the carpenter's chisel were obviously made by a left-handed man; the marks of the screwdriver and cold chisel by a right handed man. Renard was left handed. Courtois right-handed. Third conclusion of Bertillon: Renard and Courtois worked together. Renard manipulating the carpenter's chisel, Courtois the screwdriver and cold chisel. This proved to be so.

To facilitate the detection of a burglar Bertillon has constructed a machine—an "effraction dynamometer," he calls it—by means of which the amount of force required to break open a door may be accurately measured. In the jaws of that ingenious instrument he places a piece of wood taken from a door that has been forced. The amount of pressure required to produce a mark as deep as that made by the burglar on the door is indicated by a finger that travels over a dial. What good is that? Bertillon answers:

"I can tell you whether one person ... two persons forced the door; it one, whether that person was a man or a woman, a boy or an adult. How? Because a boy or a woman is phys-

She was leaning back in her chair watching it with fascinated intensity. Then she drew her eyes away, arose to her feet and began to scream. "The imps, the imps!" she cried.

"My dear lady," he said, "All you need ...t rid of your imps is to get a mouse ...p and to keep your aquarium out of the ...unlight."

"Now listen carefully," said the criminologist. "The retina of the eye is the part upon which the images of things are reflected and then transmitted to the brain. The retina is exceedingly sensitive and under certain conditions will hold the shape of what it has been impressed with for an appreciable time. If you look at something colored a bright red for a few moments and then transfer your gaze to a blank wall or to a neutral colored white wall, you will seem to see that same image on that wall but colored green. If the object is green you will see it as red. The image is really photographed on your retina, but you have the hallucination of seeing it projected against the surface that limits your vision.

"Now the sunlight falling on the water of the aquarium was reflected upon your ceiling, which I see is a very fair pink. Absorbed in your study you were not conscious of this light, but it drew your eyes to it and to an extent placed you in a very light state of hypnosis. When your consciousness threw off the restraint, you had been gazing at the dancing spot of sunlight for a few minutes, and it was retained by your retina. Naturally you saw the face image in its colors and, being imaginative and impressionable and not understanding the cause, it created in you the idea of witchcraft. The sun begins to strike the spot where the bowl stood at 2 o'clock this time of year and leaves it around 4. That is why you only saw 'the imps' during those hours.

"Now let put the bowl back where it was, look at the spot intently for a few moments, then close your eyes and tell me if you do not see 'the imps'."

"They're there," cried the singer. "But why do they look like imps?"

"Only your imagination giving them form," said the criminologist. "Examine them closely with the eyes closed and see if they do not only seem to be the shape of the reflection." "They do," whispered the singer.

"But, my more and the strange marks" she suddenly cried.

"A little mouse ran over the floor of th fireplace last night after the fire had gone out." said Dr. Frecon. "Your score had fallen on the floor near the grate. He ran over it. There was soot there. He got it on his feet and tail and marked your score with it. Your aroused imatination and fears did the rest"

Case J— How Dr. Weingart Knew That a Lame Man and an Anaemic Girl Had Stolen the Historic Echerstein Emeralds---And How He Recovered Them

THE emeralds of the Baroness Irma Von Echerstein are famous throughout Europe, particularly are they the pride of Baden-Baden, that gay little Austrian city just outside of which stands the ancient schloss or castle of the Echersteins.

In Baden-Baden the jewels are kept in a specially made safe built in the wall of her bedroom. The door of the safe is covered by a wooden panel, which naturally seems to be part of the wainscoting of the wall. It is opened by a secret spring. The safe door has a combination lock.

One January morning last year Dr. Alfred Weingart, one of the foremost German criminologists, was called to his telephone. An hysterical voice greeted him. It was the Baroness Von Echerstein. Five minutes later he came at once to me. "At once, madame," answered Dr. Weingart without further question. A few minutes later he was at the schloss and was ushered to the boudoir of the Baroness.

"My emeralds! my emeralds!" she cried. "They have been stolen!" She drew Dr. Weingart toward a part of the wall. A panel swung open. Behind it was the open door of a small safe. The safe was empty

"When did you discover this?" asked Dr. Weingart. "I awakened early this morning," replied the Baroness. "I had a strange dull headache—I never have headaches—and my throat was dry and feverish. I started to ring for my maid. Unconsciously I always look toward this panel as soon as I awake, I followed my habit this morning and to my horror saw that it was open. I jumped from bed and ran to it—and saw it as you see it now. Oh, my emeralds! How could any one have done this when the slightest sound awakens me!"

Mystery of the Open Windows.

By this time three of Dr. Weingart's assistants had arrived carrying various packages and an instrument that looked something like the familiar penny-in-the-slot machine. A sergeant of police also presented himself. "I have my men below" he said, "in case I am requested." "Very well," said Dr. Weingart, "let no one leave the schloss, but do not pretend you have come. Only one man is to be whoever it may be go again, no matter who it is." The sergeant saluted and left

Dr. Weingart then took a chisel and ripped away the panel behind which was the safe. He cut away the lock from the bedroom door. "By the way," he said, turning to the Baroness, "I notice that although this is January the tops of all your four windows are down Do you always sleep with them so?" "I can't understand that," she replied. "I always have one window opened at the top. I went to sleep so last night. Neither I nor my maid can account for the others being open." "Quite so," said Dr Weingart. "Do not exclaim, my dear lady, but I would like to have just a drop of your blood." The surprised Baroness let the physician make a tiny cut beside her thumbnail. He took from it a few drops of blood and handed the little glass slide to one of his assistants.

Dr. Weingart States His Theory.

He then took the panel that had hidden the safe and placed one side in the jaws of the odd machine the assistant had brought. "This," he said, "is what Bertillon, the great French criminologist, calls his effraction dynamometer. It makes scratches" He exerted various pressures. As he did so a needle on the dial above swung about This movement his assistant carefully noted, comparing the scratch through his glass with those left on the panel by the robbers.

Then the criminologist examined the safe door minutely with his glass. Afterwards he pushed the lock which he had taken from the door out of its encircling wood and placed it in a porcelain basin. Into this basin he poured liquids from three vials, which an assistant handed him. He passed the contents through a fine screen and then examined the screen through his magnifying glass. Just before this the assistant who had taken the slide containing the drops of the Baroness's blood had passed him a piece of paper on which a few words were written.

"Baroness," said Dr. Weingart, "your emeralds were stolen by two persons, a man and a woman. One of them at least is an intimate of your house. The man's right leg is two inches shorter than his left. He limps. The woman is anaemic. You were made unconscious by nitrous oxide gas, forced through the keyhole of your door When you were artificially overcome the door of the door was turned from outside and your room entered. Because neither of your robbers knew the secret spring on the panel, but one of them did know its location, it was forced open. The safe was opened by the lock being burned out with electro-oxygen gas. You were kept under the influence of nitrous oxide during the operation. The intruders wore respirators. They opened the windows because they did not wish you to die under the effects of the anaesthetic. They were robbers, not murderers. The woman, beside being anaemic suffers from insomnia. She wore very fine silk stockings. The man wore coarse gray woolen ones. The man is left-handed—he used the left hand as well as he does the right. He is unusually powerful and six feet tall. The woman has very long, tapering fingers. Do any of your servants meet these descriptions?"

"One of my room maids seems to be anaemic and has a very rough skin," replied the Baroness. "But I have no servant who limps."

The sergeant was called and the servants were lined up. Nothing was found. The servants quarters were gone through. At last, in a corner of a drawer in one of the rooms was found one of the Baroness's rings. Beside it was a vial in which was some chloroform.

"Who occupies this room?" asked Dr. ... replying to the objects.

"My butler," replied the Baroness. The butler, brought up, proved to be a plump little man not more than five feet four tall with a double chin and a pipe at the ending of the right leg in his room.

Dr. Weingart took from a case a small pair of pincers, and with them removed the ... of the vial. Holding the ring in the pincers he sprinkled a fine powder over the ... and. Blowing this away a finger print was plainly shown on the stone. He subjected the vial to the same treatment. Other finger prints appeared upon the glass. Next he examined the inner part of the ring with the microscope and taking a piece of absorbent cotton from a case, wiped it out carefully. The pieces of cotton he gave to an assistant, who hurried away with it.

Then he took impressions of the butler's fingers and compared them with those on the emeralds and glass.

"You see," he said to the Baroness, "the butler ... exhibited these articles The peculiary ridges are entirely different." "Then how did they get in his drawer?" asked the perplexed Baroness, "and what becomes of your six foot man?"

Dr. Weingart called the police sergeant. "Has anyone come in since I arrived?" he asked. "Yes," said the sergeant, "Heinrich, a footman, who had been into town on an errand." "For whom?" asked Dr. Weingart. "To mail a letter for a housemaid named Emma Weisner, to whom he is engaged," said the sergeant. "Why, that is the maid I had in mind when you spoke of anaemia," exclaimed the Baroness. "How tall is he?" asked the criminologist. "At least six feet," answered the sergeant.

"Arrest the footman and Miss Emma at once," ordered the criminologist.

"But Heinrich does not limp!" said the Baroness, "he is an ideal servant."

"Bring them at once," ordered Dr Weingart "Heinrich," said Dr Weingart, "the man who did this robbery had an accident to his left hand. That is clear. We are trying all the servants to see if their left hand is weak. Please lift up this chair first with the right and then with the left hand."

"Why, my left hand is as good as my right," eagerly said the footman.

What the Blood-Test Revealed.

"Take off his shoes," ordered Dr. Weingart. The police threw themselves on the footman and unfastened the boots. The right one had a sole two inches deeper than that of the left. The right leg was that much shorter.

He wore coarse woollen stockings.

"Take him into the next room," said Dr. Weingart. "Now my dear," he said tenderly to the maid, "I must have a few drops of your blood. And let me see what kind of stockings you wear. And is there not a piece of skin torn from the inside of your middle finger. Ah, yes, I see there is. See Baroness, there is a triangular piece a half inch long gone from it. Dear, dear, now how did you do that?"

The frightened maid stood still as the criminologist ran a needle down beside her thumb nail and pressing a few drops of blood into a glass slide handed it to his assistant

A few minutes later the assistant returned. "Anaemic and corresponds perfectly in the proportion of red corpuscles to the exhibit from the panel to the ring," he said.

"There Larceny," said Dr. Weingart. "are the thieves. I have no doubt that the police will be able to get from them the present location of your emeralds. But to show them how little use it will be to feign innocence, I will tell you now I know they are guilty."

"Indeed,"cried the perplexed Baroness, "I cannot see how you could tell that my own servants had robbed me, and how did you know that one was a woman and one a man?"

"There were no marks on the window sills," said Dr. Weingart, "and, therefore, I knew that the robbery must have been done by someone inside. But how could anyone have robbed you without awakening you? When you spoke of your headache on awakening and the dry mouth and thirst I began to suspect that some drug have been administered to you without any one having entered your room? Manifestly, if no one had come in by way of the windows, it could only have been applied from the door. Ah, the keyhole! I cut away the lock and subjected it to chemical tests. Now nitrous oxide, in contact with iron, leaves distinct traces of corrosion discernable by chemical and microscopic tests. My tests revealed the presence of nitrous oxide upon the inside of the lock. I took a sample of your blood because nitrous oxide is absorbed through the lungs into the circulation and its presence can be told for a considerable period after administration. It has the faculty of increasing the red corpuscles to almost twice the normal number in a given area. To be specific, from 4,500,000 per cubic millimeter to between 7,000,000 and 8,000,000. I found your corpuscles vastly above the normal.

"You were, then, first rendered unconscious by the fumes of the gas being forced through the keyhole of your door into your room.

"Very easily," said the criminologist. "You saw my on the Bertillon dynamometer ... that ... of pressure needed to make certain scratches. I measured the scratches left by the robbers on the door panel and ... them on the unscratched piece of ... I found that there were ... kinds made. Two of them were produced by a man, and the position of the marks showed that they had been made by both the right and the left hands with a chisel. The marks clearly showed equal dexterity with both hands. Therefore, the man was ambidextrous. The other marks had been made by a weaker person, clearly a woman. The dynamometer gave me the exact force used by her

"As for the lameness—I found ... my microscope many hob-nail scratches in a thin layer of dust that always ... on hard wood floors within an ... These ... them. They were the ... wearing feet. One pair was that of a man and the marks showed that he was wearing heavy stockings. A few minute pieces of wood detected by the glass showed me that these were gray wool. Now these marks were unusual inasmuch as the one made by the left foot was always heavier than the right. A lame person always bears down heavier on the longer leg. This is a matter of observation. His footsteps fall flat or and always show this heavier impression. He touches the foot on the shorter leg lightly and swings heavily on the foot of the longer. This, then, was the explanation of the varying prints in the dust. I arrived at his height by measurement of these prints and the application of the formula of Lacccsagne who has worked out a scale which tells the exact height from the size of the feet."

How Her Blood Betrayed Her.

"Still I am at loss to know how you drew your deductions as to the ma ..." said the Baroness.

"Upon the side of the panel," said Dr. Weingart, "I found a splinter upon which under the microscope I detected some blood and a small piece of skin. I tested the blood and found it anaemic. It was lacking in red corpuscles The skin, under the glass, showed tiny unnistakable traces of eczema."

"But the ring and the vial in the butler's room," asked the Baroness. "Is he implicated?"

"Not at all" replied Dr. Weingart "They were placed there by the maid to divert suspicion in case of a search. I got from the ring my second proof of her guilt. The inside of the ring was stained. You observed me wipe it carefully. This stain was dried blood.

His assistant handed him a little written report.

"Take the police to where you dug the hole and buried the emeralds," commanded Dr. Weingart to the footman.

"How do you know that I buried them," he blurted out

The Doctor smiled

"The dirt under your finger nails betrayed you," he said. "Why should you have been digging in earth with your bare hands?"

The footman had no ... and, appalled by the array of evidence, confessed. The footman took the police to where he had buried his loot in the Baroness's own garden

Have You Really Got GOOD TASTE?

[illegible] ways of offending against good taste, so that not even a [illegible] knows of doing that, according to the computation of an ingenious French chef, a dangerous mot [illegible] in wait for those who give no thought to the exigencies of taste. You may think that fashion only is necessary, and [illegible] see in a superfluous factor in life. It is the very reverse. The intelligent application of good taste makes life more comfortable, enjoyable, in a word, more livable, not only for yourself, but for your relatives and friends.

Now how about your china ware? Is it really attractive and in good taste?

[illegible] to afford Limoges china or Royal Worcester for everyday use, and you may not have a large enough set of one of these exquisite wares to entertain more than a dozen guests at a time at dinner. But, however humble your means, you can avoid having porcelain or near-porcelain that is positively garish. Plates with enormous deep red roses or cherries as big as penny rubber balls may appeal to your aesthetic sense at first sight, but that appeal will be short-lived. If you dislike an undecorated china set, examine carefully the sets having a small, unobtrusive pattern, or those with a beading or edging in gold and some subdued shade—green, red or blue. Remember that in eating from a plate one is pretty close to it, and an enormous red cabbage rose, impudently staring up through the midst of a fragile pattern made by the meandering gravy and a silver [illegible] must be in process of dissection, will appear anything but inviting.

You may be fond of collecting freak crockery, but, no matter how quaint, do not use [illegible] your guest to drink beer out of a mug, the lower of which is the skirt of a woman unduly extended by the old-fashioned crinoline or bustle, the bust of the lady forming an ornamental extension of the handle. And do not serve the friend who is reputed the worst gossip of your neighborhood a cup of tea or chocolate from a porcelain jug the handle of which is formed by the squirming body of a serpent, with its serpent's head for a spout. If one happens to remember the poem of William Watson, "The Woman with the Serpent's Tongue," she may be mortally offended, though the jug is Sevres porcelain or Dresden china.

If you happen to have an oddity, such as an iron cup, in your possession, which, of course, cannot be classed as china ware, although usurping the functions of china for the nonce, do not offer any one whom you wish well anything to drink in the same. If it is a hot drink, the metal may be uncomfortably warm to drink from, and there are some liquids which, through chemical action upon the iron, transform themselves into poisons as deadly as the hemlock which Socrates was forced to drink.

Avoid china in ornamentine which the artist forgot that the force of gravity pulls all objects, be they as light as a feather, down and not up. Garlands and festoons which hang upward instead of downward are an abomination and should be shunned.

Do not err with Mr. Gradgrind. Facts, precision, matter-of-fact-ness in portraying details are all very well and in place in a text book, but a china set, each plate of which presents a different flower, not gracefully curved as it curves when stirred by the moving wind, but erect and angular, as it lies in your lap after you have picked

Are Your Chairs Uncomfortable,

"Gravy bowls with a loose platter are an unmitigated nuisance."

it, is worthy of Gradgrind, who wanted "to teach these children nothing but facts;" but not of your dinner table.

Last but not least, since we desire those whim we invite to dinner to be comfortable, it is a bad plan to serve food or drink in any vessel which may lead to embarrassment. Gravy bowls with a loose platter, on which the bowl with the hot, greasy gravy must be balanced, are an unmitigated nuisance, which, if the conversation is dull, is apt to lead to disaster. After dinner coffee cups which are too heavy, or which rest upon a flimsy structure attached to the body of the cup, thereby presenting as unstable an appearance as the Leaning Tower of Pisa, will check the flow of merriment and vivacity and conversation effectually, because they necessitate the concentrated attention of each guest upon his cup and saucer.

Little salt shakers that topple over at the slightest touch are also in bad taste because they are not only unhandy, but they make the guests feel uncomfortable. In fact, any table ware that is inconvenient, as well as beautiful, is in poor taste. There are several forms of cake dishes and fruit dishes that set up on a sort of pedistal and these are to be avoided, especially the fruit dishes of this sort, because they are top-heavy and easily tipped over and when they do tip over they are so heavy they are quite likely to smash a number of other dishes. There are many other such dishes, including pickle jars, marmelade holders, cheese holders and the like, that are all cumbersome and bothersome and therefore in poor taste. One can always get the serviceable combined with the beautiful in table dishes.

Have you good taste in jewelry? The fad for old pieces of jewelry is really not developed to a deleterious term, because old jewelry has one incalculable advantage over modern jewelry. Every piece of jewelry our grandmothers wore was handmade and unique. The jewellers of that day did not multiply their favorite design indefinitely. They did not repeat it twice over. They varied their designs incessantly, evolving as many different forms as nature herself. You can probably count on the fingers of one hand the jewelers in New York to-day who deal in exclusive designs. The average manufacturing jeweller turns out a thousand or ten thousand copies of the same brooch, bracelet, ring, hatpin, mesh bag, etc.

For this reason the greatest care should be exercised in the selection of jewelry. Formerly, when each piece of jewelry was hand made and necessarily dear, it was made by the man who designed it, the working jeweller was an artist, not a mere artisan. There are over 2,000 gargoyles on the roof of the Church of Notre Dame in Paris, [illegible] of these are [illegible] And the jewellers in former days were actuated by the same noble impulse, the craftsman's love of his work that inspired the humble stone mason fashioning a gargoyle to drain the water from a roof.

Study each old jewelry piece as you can contrive to see it. Once you fall in love with the noble simplicity of the old designs you will reject much jewelry of the current day that heretofore appeared to you desirable or even perfect. The entire trend of our day is to revolt, where we can, some of the simplicity and dignity of by gone ages when life was less strenuous.

Jewelry, being an article of very intimate personal adornment, conspicuously bears the hallmark of approval of the wearer. Good taste in jewelry does not consist in overloading oneself with pins and rings, themselves overloaded with a barbaric profusion of gems of all colors of the rainbow. In no particular of dress should the selective instinct of the wearer assert itself more emphatically. An harmonious diamond brooch, from the hand beside an amethyst of oval shape, the turn crowding a third ring with a three-quarter inch opal set in a circle of pearls, all huddled together and forming so invincible a stockade that the finger can hardly be bent, is not merely not good taste, but vulgarity convinced.

A small diamond may be much more expensive than a much larger one. This is something that very few persons realize. The cost of a gem depends entirely upon its purity, its flawlessness, not upon its size

Why BLONDES Have WEAK Eyes

BLONDES are more apt to contract eye [illegible] than brunettes. But this is not the time for the brunettes to rejoice because recent statistics show that more brunettes are afflicted with eye trouble than blondes.

And negroes are seldom troubled with eye disease.

This all sounds somewhat paradoxical—somewhat confusing—but there is an explanation, just as there is an explanation for everything.

The reason why negroes seldom have eye disease is because they lack certain tissues in the eye balls, and it is in these tissues that the eye diseases get their start. For this same reason blondes are more apt to have eye diseases than brunettes because of the presence of more tissues in the eyeballs than in the eyes of their dark-haired and darker-skinned brothers and sisters.

The reason why brunettes, although less apt to have eye disease than blondes, are [illegible] in far greater numbers than the blondes is also simple when understood. Eye diseases apparently started in the Orient, where nearly everyone is a brunette and where dark eyes are the great rule. Conditions in China, Japan, Egypt, Persia and such places are such that eye diseases flourish to a greater extent than in this country or England or Germany or in any such countries where it is colder and where the blue and gray-eyed people are in the majority.

It is said there were no cases of trachoma, that dread eye disease, known in Europe until Napoleon's soldiers returned from Egypt where the disease is quite common. Immigrants with eye trouble are now deported and this is already beginning to lessen the percentage of people afflicted with eye diseases.

What Makes CHILDREN Round-Shouldered

NO baby is ever born round-shouldered. Every child when it begins to walk [illegible] practically erect. Nearly all children of four, five and six years, before they go to school, stand perfectly straight, and their shoulders are square.

When children begin to go to school the trouble starts. Hardly a child is round-shouldered when he enters the primary grade. It is the sitting in badly constructed chairs, and the leaning forward and working on badly designed school desks that is the beginning of round shoulders.

It is a interesting fact that most children are decidedly round-shouldered before they reach the fourth grade.

One way to help overcome this is to train the child at home to sit up straight. Give the child a book to look at and watch him. If he stoops over, or bends low, or "hunches" up his shoulders, or sags in his little chest, or does any of those things that tend to make him round-shouldered, correct him.

Do this mildly and pleasantly. Do not be cross, as the effect will not be good. But by continual correction of the youngster, telling him cheerfully that he cannot grow up to be big and strong and straight, that he can never be a big soldier, or "like papa," or by telling the little girl she will not grow up to be a nice tall, handsome lady unless she sits up straight, you will find a great deal of harm that has been done in school will be overcome in the home.

YOU MIGHT TRY---

Finishing Heavy Cloth.

To give a heavy cloth garment the fine finish which is so desirable baste the material firmly and press before stitching, then stitch and press again very thoroughly.

Improving the Lawn.

To rid a lawn of dandelions, put a drop of sulphuric acid into the heart of each dandelion plant being careful not to touch the surrounding grass with the acid. One drop will suffice to kill the roots of small plants, when they may be pulled out. Large plants may need a second application.

Right Way to Sweep Matting.

In sweeping a matted floor, it is a good plan to cover the broom with a piece of cotton flannel. This takes the dust up readily and will be found to save the matting much wear. A bare broom spinters the straw badly and soon make it rough.

Cheap Vacuum Cleaner.

A BICYCLE pump is a good substitute for a vacuum cleaner in getting dust from nooks and crannies in marble statuary, plaster casts, carved furniture or any crevices where it may lurk in spite of dust cloth and rush. Run the open end of the rubber tubing over the surface to be dusted, while working the pump vigorously with the foot. A soft dust cloth will do the rest.

A Rapid Glove Cleaner.

A QUICK way to clean gloves is to take a piece of soft cloth, rub it on the under side of some good soap which has softened somewhat by lying on the dish, and then rub the gloves vigorously with this cloth. The gloves should be worn while being cleaned, and no water should be used. This same method of cleaning can be applied with good results to baby's white kid shoes, and, with a little water added, white canvas shoes can be thoroughly cleaned. The canvas shoes should be stuffed with paper or cotton so they will keep their shape while drying after being cleaned in this way.

Removing Blood Stains.

To remove blood stains from linen put a drop of water on each stain and cover it with a layer of common laundry starch finely powdered. Then brush off the starch, and the stain will not be seen.

How BIG EARS Make DEAFNESS

If you have ever seen a horse race you may have noticed that the horse always runs with its ears pressed back close to its head. A dog running does the same thing. This is because no horse or dog is ever stupid enough to make its ears a scoop for the wind, or better, a funnel through which the wind enters the ear to cause perhaps congestion of the delicate membranes, with possible deafness as a result. Of course the horse and dog have not reasoned this out, but instinct has taught them that they can avoid pain by pressing the ears back to their heads when the wind is blowing against them.

Medical men have long noticed that persons with large outstanding ears are more susceptible to deafness and ear troubles than those with small, closely set ones. Dr. Robert T. Morris, professor of surgery at the New York Post-Graduate Medical School and Hospital, believes that this is due to the fact that such ears deflect currents of cold air against the delicate drum membrane and the equally delicately lined approaches to it.

The trouble is that our ears are really passages into the brain. Their outer shape is that best adapted to catch the air vibrations which we call sounds. These vibrations are carried through the passage of the ear and strike against the highly stretched membrane called the drum. By the drum the vibrations are transferred to the brain by the auditory nerve, and become what we call hearing. Manifestly a passage that must admit sound cannot keep out wind, and so when cold currents of air rush through the channel we have been describing and beat up against the drum congestion is liable to follow.

Congestion is an over-filling of blood vessels, and one of its causes is the sudden contact of cold air with one of the warm surfaces of our body. What we call cold in the head is really congestion of the delicate lining of the nasal passages. Sometimes the [illegible] with its ears pressed back close to its head. A dog running does the same thing. This is because no horse or dog is ever stupid enough to make its ears a scoop for the wind, or better, a funnel through which the wind enters the ear to cause perhaps congestion of the delicate membranes, with possible deafness as a result. Of course the horse and dog have not reasoned this out, but instinct has taught them that they can avoid pain by pressing the ears back to their heads when the wind is blowing against them.

Medical men have long noticed that persons with large outstanding ears are more susceptible to deafness and ear troubles than those with small, closely set ones. Dr. Robert T. Morris, professor of surgery at the New York Post-Graduate Medical School and Hospital, believes that this is due to the fact that such ears deflect currents of cold air against the delicate drum membrane and the equally delicately lined approaches to it.

The trouble is that our ears are really passages into the brain. Their outer shape is that best adapted to catch the air vibrations which we call sounds. These vibrations are carried through the passage of the ear and strike against the highly stretched membrane called the drum. By the drum the vibrations are transferred to the brain by the auditory nerve, and become what we call hearing. Manifestly a passage that must admit sound cannot keep out wind, and so when cold currents of air rush through the channel we have been describing and beat up against the drum congestion is liable to follow.

SECRETS OF SUCCESS---No. 3---The Shopgirl

By THOMAS W. HOTCHKISS,
Vocational Counsellor.

TWENTY years ago the work of the saleswoman [illegible] She would feel the hope [illegible] At present three years of struggle [illegible] exceptional number of those [illegible] Close confinement, bad [illegible] at a time and the burden [illegible] a serious menace to health.

Wages are still a matter of economics and trade agreement, and belong to the ethics of the business world; but the conditions of this employment have been materially improved by the "welfare" work of the social secretaries employed by the department stores of the largest cities, and the law now requires that seats shall be provided for saleswomen and girls. In former years a salesgirl was sometimes glad to leave this work for almost any other occupation, and even found domestic service a desirable substitute. She still must meet ill-mannered and unreasonable customers, but today she knows better than formerly how to meet the improved conditions. She is a trained worker, and can work with hope of advancement and better pay.

Salesmanship is taught as a science and an art in some of the stores. It involves a study of both the goods and the tastes and needs of customers. The manufacture, quality and value of goods; how to take care of stock; the value of courtesy and the rules and forms of business as applicable to the retail store where she is employed are studied, and the saleswoman is able to proceed with a good working knowledge of the store's whole business system, including the duties of employes in their various occupations.

The positions for girls in a big department store are errand girls, cash girls, or check girls; cashiers and bundle wrappers, markers, stock girls, saleswomen, heads of stock and assistant buyers and buyers. The errand girl receives from $3 to $4 per week; the buyers from $1,000 to $10,000 a year. The saleswomen are the most numerous. Their pay is from $3 to $12 per week, with an increase to $15, $20, or even $30 in certain departments, such as costumes, suits and furs, where good stature and executive ability are the exceptional qualities required.

Many women try salesmanship on the theory that it is easy, unskilled work, but they find it calls for fairly good education, correct use of English, legible writing, knowledge of business arithmetic, as well as good appearance, neatness, promptness and accuracy. Conscientious devotion to the employer's interests, sincerity, tact, enthusiasm and fidelity to detail in serving the public are important requisites of success, and the work calls for avoidance of the "slough of despond," that apathy of indifference which marks the beginning of loss of interest and the inevitable loss of customers.

The saleswoman makes her worth known to her employer by skill in making sales and retaining her customers as permanent patrons of the store. Recognition and advancement depend on courage, patience, initiative, self-confidence, cheerfulness, friendliness, fidelity and loyalty. It is the lack of these qualities, combined often with inattention to the customer's needs, because of chit-chat with the neighboring saleswoman, or the lack of technical knowledge of the goods and of human nature, or the lack of executive ability that are the handicaps to be overcome.

Why DAMP Weather BOTHERS Us

OLD soldiers, women who have been hard at work, persons afflicted with rheumatism and the neuralgic. These unfortunate persons will tell you of "twitching pains" in their joints, of dull pains in the old wars, of the sharp twinging in their joints or the shooting pains of neuralgia.

Why do these conditions foretell changing weather? Because the human body is a barometer; because atmospheric changes—pressure, humidity, evaporation—affect the body just the same as they do the barometric needle or the column of mercury. What sends the needle swinging upward, or causes the mercury to rise? The alternating pressure of the atmosphere.

Scars, rheumatic inflammations, affected joints, neuralgias, cause the tiny endings of nerves to be over-sensitive and under some unnatural pressure of the surrounding tissues. Now let this pressure be increased by outside atmospheric forces, and every little nerve ending cries out for mercy.

Many persons think because damp weather causes pain in their rheumatic joints it is harmful to take cold baths. Now the fact is that baths—Turkish or other kinds—will not do them harm, but be beneficial. You can see by the above explanation that damp weather itself is not the cause of pains and rheumatic twinges.

Some individuals find that damp weather bothers their throats, but that a glass of cold water will not distress them, and all this is due to be an unaccountable thing. It is because of the extreme humidity of the air and the moistness of the air. The cool air coming into contact with a dry mucous membrane causes a very rapid evaporation, and this state of affairs makes for trouble. The glass of water simply goes down the throat to the stomach, but the air you breathe it has to follow the nasal passages down to the bronchial tubes into the lungs.

If the air you breathe in is at a temperature of 32 degrees, it is warmed up by the respiratory passages to about 98 degrees, and when expelled from the lungs has become saturated with water. If this moisture be not supplied rapidly enough by the mucous membranes of the bronchial tubes and nose, dryness and irritation result. This irritation is generally due to too rapid evaporation of moisture from the habit of mouth breathing or working in rooms where the humidity is too low—in fact, to any habit or condition which interferes with the natural moisture of the passages. This irritation may be sufficient to inflame the breathing passages so that germs lodge there and cause "colds" or even graver troubles.

The application of hot or medicated vapors to the throat is, then, you see, merely to put the membranes in such a condition that they can supply the proper amount of moisture to the inhaled air—make a right mixture for the lungs to use.

The air of Turkish baths is saturated by moisture. This permits the evaporation from the mucous membranes and the skin to go on without injuring your health.

Your STOMACH

WHEN you peck your food [illegible] when it appears [illegible] intestines you do not feel it. If you put your finger into a cup of hot water you get a very distinct sensation, but when that hot water reaches your stomach you have no such feeling of heat. A glass of ice water feels cold to your tongue, but not to your stomach.

Recent surgical experiments have revealed the curious fact that nature has not provided many nerves of sensation for the internal organs of the body—stomach, liver, kidneys, intestines, etc. Surgeons find it possible to cut, burn, saw and tear most of the internal organs of the body without producing any unpleasant sensation to the patient.

And yet every small boy who has eaten too many green apples knows perfectly well that the stomach can produce the severest sort of pains, which are commonly called "gripes." This sort of sensation is explained as being a special pain caused by the distention or stretching of some part of the digestive canal. While there is no pain from touch or cutting, there is pain from distension or stretching.

The digestive tract also has two sensations peculiarly its own—hunger and thirst. When we are hungry we feel a general sensation of uneasiness and a sense of emptiness in the stomach. This is due to the excitement of the nerve centres of the stomach, which become irritable when the stomach is empty and begin to stir up the muscles of the stomach into activity. This fuss and excitement of the nerves and muscles of the stomach finally reach up into the brain and call attention to the fact that it is time to eat.

THE REST IS SILENCE

THE ocean of many tragedies holds in its silent depths another story of heroism. Two weeks ago tonight the Titanic settled down through the deep miles of salt water, and now her broken hulk lies on the soft silt at the ocean's bed, there to remain through the ages, and gradually to be covered and obliterated as the falling dust that our planet encounters in space raises the ocean's floor.

Another story of the sea is told, another horror is added to the long list of great disasters.

And the story is the story told so often, of carelessness and neglect.

More than 1,500 dead lie below the water, hearts are broken, homes are destroyed, hopes are blasted, fathers and mothers and children parted.

It is a dreadful, cruel and criminal story, hidden below the quiet waves.

But the story is told, the chapter is finished, and the book is closed.

There will be punishment, it is to be hoped, for those that are guilty, and comfort will come in time for those that are bereaved.

Such courage as was displayed by the victims of the great disaster, men and women, must in time bring consolation to those left behind.

The children of the fathers that would not save their own lives when duty told them to die, and the children of the noble woman who preferred death with her husband to life without him, will, as the months and the years pass, find the bitter pain of parting change gradually to peaceful and lasting reverence and deep pride in those that died so bravely.

For the rest of the world, for the millions whom the disaster did not touch personally, the lasting thought will be this:

Every great disaster, every great affliction, rightly interpreted and rightly used, is a lesson and a help to all of the human race, throughout the future.

No martyr, no hero dies in vain. The safety and the progress of the world are built upon the afflictions and the sufferings of those that have gone before us.

The children of the men and women that died on the Titanic will find the best expression of their duty in Lincoln's immortal words of dedication upon the battlefield of Gettysburg:

> We have come to dedicate a portion of that field as a final resting-place for those who here gave their lives that that nation might live. It is altogether fitting and proper that we should do this.
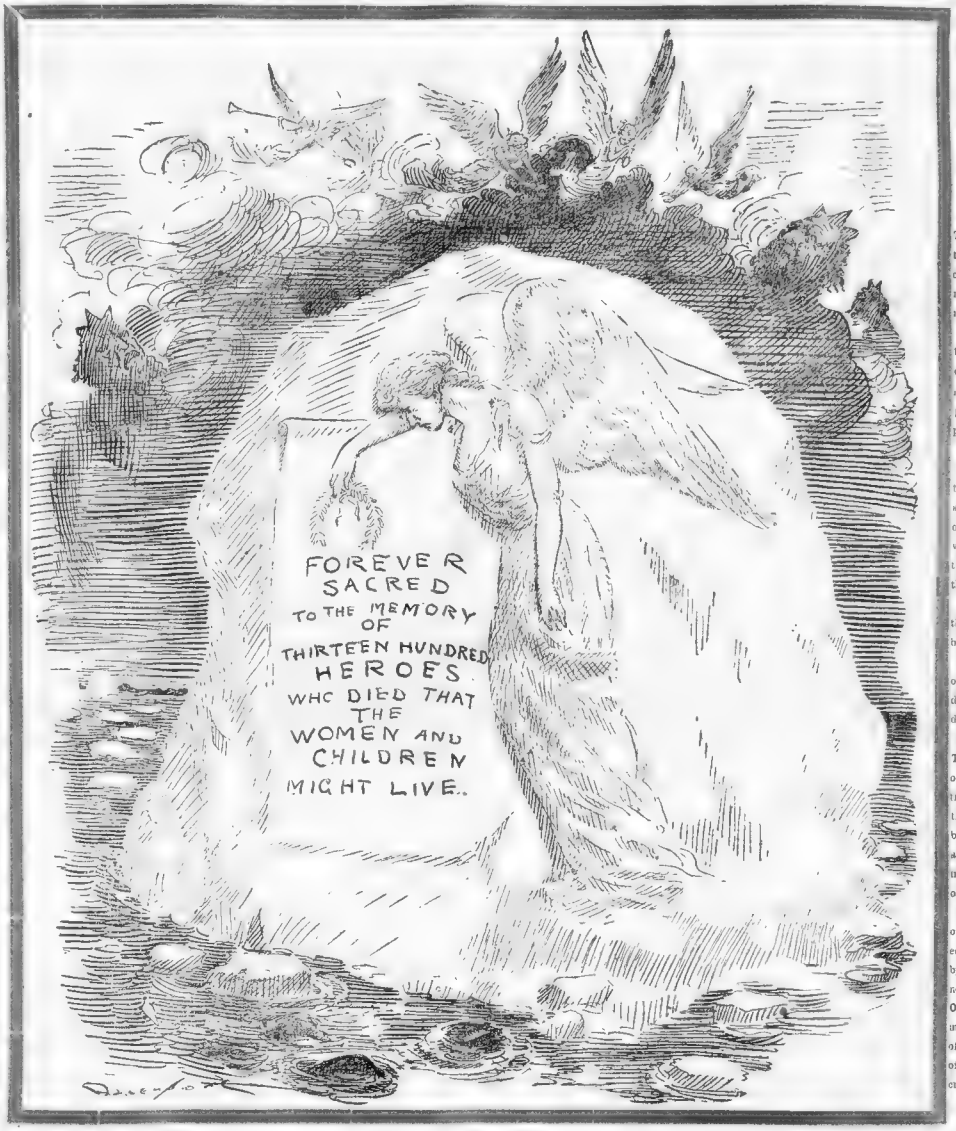
> But, in a larger sense, we cannot dedicate—we cannot hallow—this ground. The brave men, living and dead, who struggled here, have consecrated it, far above our poor power to add or detract.



OUR HEROES

IN the middle of the North Atlantic a giant iceberg lifts its white cliffs 500 feet in air. It towers like a mighty marble monument above the graves of 1,500 heroes who died that the women and children might be saved.

Soon this monument will dissolve and disappear, as sooner or later in the lapse of years all monuments disintegrate and disappear. But the memory of the noble deeds of these brave and self-sacrificing men should live forever.

Swept without need, without heed, without reckoning or reason into a disaster which meant inevitable death, these heroes thought not of their own safety, not of their own lives, but only of the lives and safety of the weak women and little children confided to their care.

Husbands embraced their wives, fathers kissed their children good-bye, and men who were leaving wives and children desolate far away at home labored to save the wives and children of companions in misfortune.

Then when the dear ones, the dependent ones, had been sent to safety in the lifeboats and had drifted away into the dark night, these true men, calm and courageous, stood alone upon the deck of the doomed ship and went down to death and to glory.

Who would not choose so glorious a death?

Who would not rather die a hero than live a coward?

These men have died as men should die. They performed their duty to their fellow men, their obligation to their God.

So may God reward them and may men remember them. And may the memory of them remain forever a noble record of past heroism for humanity, a splendid inspiration to future deeds of duty and devotion.

WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST.

The world will little note nor long remember what we say here, but it can never forget what they did here.

It is for us, the living, rather, to be dedicated here to the unfinished work which they who fought here have thus far so nobly advanced.

It is rather for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us—that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they gave the last full measure of devotion—that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain.

Life is one great battlefield. This earth has been a field of battle through all the thousands of centuries of life here. And for many centuries to come it still must remain a field of battle.

Those that survive must find their comfort in the heroism of the dead. And the race must find its lesson and its growth in the experiences and the suffering of the past.

Far out in the Atlantic Ocean there is a dreary spot, with here and there, perhaps, a broken oar, or a floating body. Desolate and wide the ocean spreads beneath the dark sky, at the spot where the great ship sank.

But in all space that ocean and the planet upon which it rolls are but a speck.

Time is the real ocean, the ocean that has no limit to its depths, and that has no boundaries.

The brave men and women of the Titanic are added to the heroes of that great ocean of time—the ocean that covers all the past, the ocean beneath whose waves brave men and women lie at rest, all the brave spirits that have lived honorably and died courageously on this planet.

It is a glorious thing for a man or a woman to have his name added to the list of those consecrated by time and by courage. Every noble death does its good work. Other human beings will travel more safely, and many thousands of lives will be saved, as a result of the disaster so needless, so cruel.

Men are free to think, and their minds travel safely through the realm of speculation today, because in the past the bands have been willing to die as heroes for the right to think, and to speak.

To die for the truth, to die for duty, is the greatest privilege in this life.

And that was the privilege of those now added to the immortal list of brave men and women.

Life is a spark, a passing moment of light followed by darkness inevitable. Happy those who die an honorable and brave death, leaving to their children and their friends a memory of honor.

Eternal peace, rest and happiness to the souls that were set free in the disaster two weeks ago.

May their memory and their example inspire for years to come those that are left to mourn.

REDMOND ON THE HOME RULE BILL

REDMOND MAKES A FRANK ACCEPTANCE OF ASQUITH BILL AND QUOTES PARNELL

JOHN E. REDMOND, M.P.

Parnell's Words in Assenting to Gladstone's Measure in 1886 Quoted as Proving That the Irish Position Hasn't Changed

By C. O'CONNELL DALVIN

WE stand where Parnell stood in 1886 on the Gladstone Home Rule bill. On the second reading of that bill, Mr. Parnell said:

We look upon the provisions of this bill as a final settlement . . . this session, and I believe the Irish people have accepted . . . as a settlement.

If I may say so reverently, continued Mr. Redmond, I personally thank God that I have lived to see this day. I believe this bill will pass into law. I believe it will result in the greater unity and strength of the empire. I believe it will put an end once and for all to the wretched ill will, suspicion and dissatisfaction that has existed in Ireland and to the suspicion and misunderstanding that has existed between this country and Ireland.

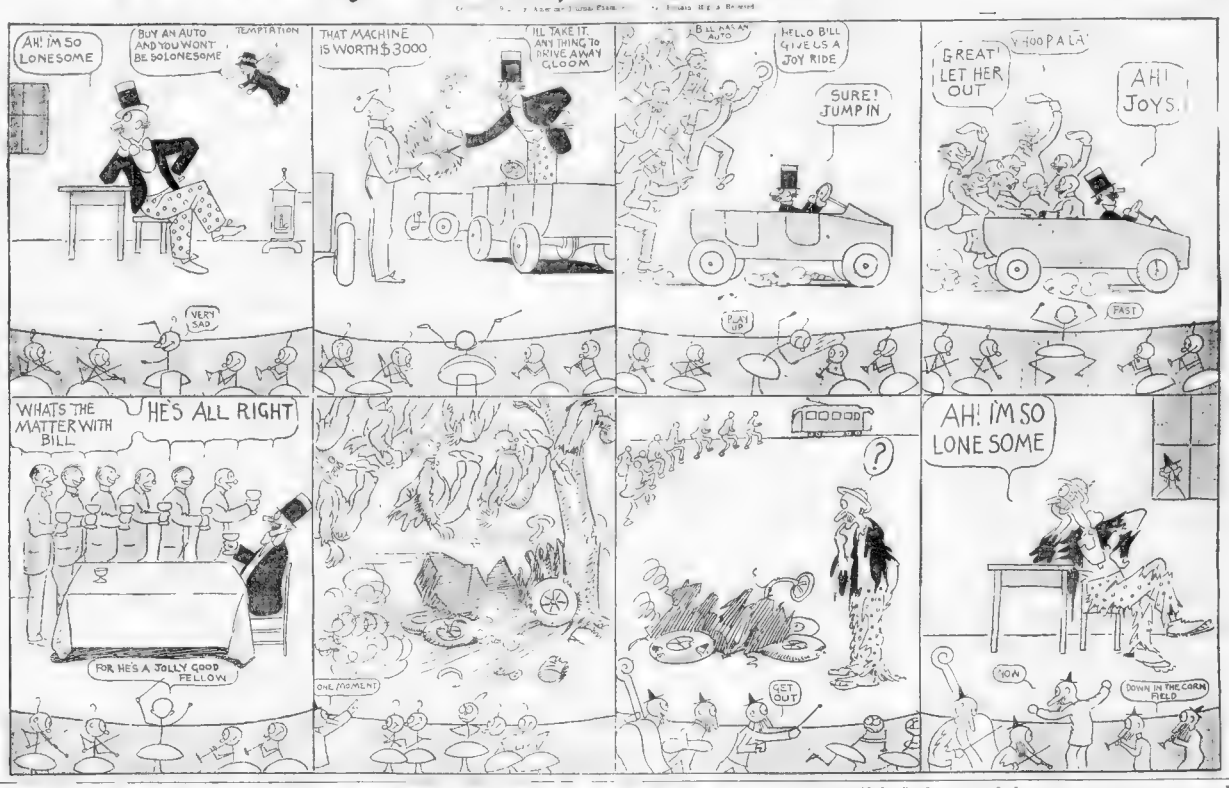
POWERS' THE-AYTER—

Showing What One Auto Can Do for a Man.

By T. E. Powers, Our Famous Dramatist.



Heine and Honus—

HEINE—Did you read that every woman can get beautiful by doing her own housework?
HONUS—My wife's mother has been doing housework all her life and she isn't beautiful yet.

By AARON HOFFMAN.
All Stage Rights Reserved by Mr. Hoffman

HEINE—Next month I'm going to fire the servant girl.

HONUS—That's nothing. I do that every month. What's the matter with this one?

HEINE—Oh, nothing. She's the best girl we ever had. She only takes three days off besides Saturday and Sunday afternoons, and she's a good cook once in a while when we have boiled eggs for dinner. She's a good cleaner—she cleans out the icebox every night after we are in bed. She's good to her folks—her brother is wearing my best pants now, and her washing always looks elegant—after we have sent it out to the laundry. She's a fine girl.

HONUS—Well, why are you going to let such a jewel get away from you?

HEINE—Because I want my wife to get beautiful.

HONUS—What has firing a girl got to do with your wife's beauty?

HEINE—Everything. Didn't you read where Professor Sargent, of Hardware College, says that every woman can get beautiful in her own kitchen by doing her own housework.

HONUS—Yes. But my wife's mother has been doing housework all her life and she aint beautiful yet.

HEINE—Well, I believe in what the professor says. And I'm going to do it. I'm going to make my wife beautiful and save twenty dollars a month besides.

HONUS—Have you told your wife yet?

HEINE—No. But I'm going to make her be beautiful whether she likes it or not. I need that twenty.

HONUS—Well, of course it's none of my business, but knowing your wife as I do I would suggest that when you spring the scheme on her that you make her a proposition to have a day woman come in twice a week at first and let her get beautiful by degrees.

HEINE—No. I want her to get beautiful as quick as possible. So the girl goes. Why don't you try it, too?

HONUS—I think I'd rather wait and see how you come out.

HEINE—But it can't fail. It's a great scheme. The professor admits it himself. According to him all a woman has to do is to cook, wash and scrub. And that will make her beautiful, because it brings all her muscles into play. Do you believe that?

HONUS—Sure. And not only that, Heine, I bet you right now that the minute you tell her your scheme it'll bring all her muscles into play.

HEINE—I'm glad you like the idea. It's a great thing for mankind. Now it don't make any difference who you marry. You don't have to be particular. No matter how homely your wife is, all you got to do is to rent a big flat and make her do the housework.

HONUS—I admit it will be a great consolation to some fellows on their honeymoon.

HEINE—With this scheme honeymoons are a waste of time. Instead of going on a trip and spending a lot of money, you can go on a trip by yourself and get he a job at general housework. And by the time the honeymoon is over and you come back she'll be worth while being married to.

HONUS—And if she ain't beautiful by that time you can start housekeeping and help things along by taking in washing.

HEINE—The discovery of the professor's ought to make women very happy.

HONUS—But it will be an awful blow to the beauty doctors. What chance will they have when a woman can get a beautiful complexion and beat the beauty doctors by beating the carpets! And what woman would be silly enough to be skinned by a skin doctor when she can remove her own freckles with a vacuum cleaner.

HEINE—You're right, Honus. And just think how much better it will be when a woman instead of oiling her face at night can get just as beautiful by getting down on her knees and oiling the floor.

HONUS—Of course, Heine, you will admit that maybe a hard day's scrubbing wouldn't cure a snub nose of snubbing.

HEINE—Maybe not. But even if the scheme proved to be a flivver it's worth a trial. I know it couldn't make my wife any homelier. And even if it did, the plan would keep her in the kitchen all the time and nobody would mind it.

HONUS—The only thing I've got against the scheme is that if we spring it on our wives they'll all leave us.

HEINE—How do you figure that AGAINST it? I figure that's the best argument in its favor.

HONUS—What right have you got to talk that way about your wife? It was she that made you what you are to-day.

HEINE—I know it, and that's what makes me sore.

HONUS—I don't blame you.

HEINE—There is only one time that I feel proud of myself.

HONUS—And when is that?

HEINE—When I think of you.

HONUS—What's the matter with me? Are you jealous because I got a country home?

HEINE—How could I be? I saw it once.

HONUS—Believe me, that's some place I got. Right on the water.

HEINE—You mean right in the water.

HONUS—Only when the tide is in. I tell you there's nothing like a place in the country where you can take a swim before breakfast.

HEINE—The trouble with your place is that some time you have to take a swim before you even get out of bed. I wouldn't live in a house where you had to sleep in a life preserver every stormy night.

HONUS—But think of the air—the air. A farmer's life, that's the thing.

HEINE—That's all right, but the trouble with your place is that you go to bed a farmer and you wake up a sailor.

HONUS—But at least I live where I can swing a cat.

HEINE—I got a swing, too, but my wife won't get in it.

HONUS—But you got to admit one thing. I got a fine garden. You see these seeds? Next week I'm going to plant.

HEINE—What are you going to raise?

HONUS—I don't know what I'm going to raise, but I'm going to plant squashes.

HEINE—Don't you raise what you plant?

HONUS—Not always. Last Spring I planted potatoes, and all I dug up was a can of peas, and it was an empty can at that. You know amateur gardening is the most exciting outdoor sport there is. It's more uncertain than horse racing. And when you plant anything all the neighbors stand around making bets as to what is going to come up. I have made a lot of money betting against the field.

HEINE—Is it a gambling game?

HONUS—The biggest gamble in the world. All the bookmakers who were put out of the business when racing stopped have gone into gardening just for the excitement. As soon as you start to plant they make book on it. If you plant radishes they lay you three to one it will come up eggplant. If you plant roses they'll lay you ten to seven it comes up cucumbers. Many a fellow has gone broke backing his own entries.

HEINE—I wouldn't put up my money on a radish to win.

HONUS—You would if it was your own garden. Many a fellow who keeps cool and uses good judgment on the Stock Exchange, the Board of Trade or at the track loses his head completely, throws caution to the winds and blows his whole bank roll on an onion that he planted himself. Why, one fellow next door to me went broke on his garden.

HEINE—How was that?

HONUS—He planted about five hundred dollars' worth of roses, hollyhocks and geraniums and he backed flowers to win.

HEINE—What came up?

HONUS—Cauliflowers.

HEINE—By golly, that was a tough break.

HONUS—It broke him. He lost everything but the mortgage.

HEINE—Well, why are you planting squashes this year? Because you want tomatoes?

HONUS—No. Lettuce.

HEINE—Let us what?

HONUS—Let us nothing. Just lettuce.

HEINE—When you say "let us" you must mean something.

HONUS—Sure. I mean something.

HEINE—Well, what do you mean?

HONUS—Lettuce.

HEINE—Let us what?

HONUS—Not "lettuce what." Just plain lettuce. Lettuce and nothing else. Don't you understand what I mean when I say "lettuce"?

HEINE—Not unless you tell me the rest of it.

HONUS—The rest of what?

HEINE—Didn't you say "let us"?

HONUS—Yes. Lettuce.

HEINE—That was all?

HONUS—Are you crazy? Lettuce—nothing!

HEINE—Well, if you don't mean anything by it why do you invite me?

HONUS—Invite you what?

HEINE—What you was going to say.

HONUS—What I was going to say I said. Lettuce.

HEINE—All right. Let us. Nobody's going to stop us.

HONUS—Is it possible that you don't know what I mean when I say lettuce?

HEINE—Sure. I know what it means when you finish what you're going to say. But I don't know what you mean when you stop right in the middle and just say "Let us." If you said "Let us have a drink," I'd know what you meant, only I'd know you didn't mean it.

HONUS—You are speaking of the verb "let us" and I am speaking of the herb "lettuce."

HEINE—What is that "herb let-us"?

HONUS—Lettuce is a piece of high-brow cabbage that they put on a ten-cent chicken sandwich so they can call it a club and charge you thirty

Well it is no use. You won't do. What's der use anyhow? I take you into my studio and try to teach you et quetra and I vas you look yourself away on stageses

DILL—I vas not

KOLB—I see. For vas, when you are in society and vas you ought to get up and try to sing

KOLB—Well, der first, when you sing in society, you must know der first ingredients

DILL—Der

KOLB—Vell, I vill tell me what iss a scale

DILL—Vell, a scale iss a certain number of harmonical sounds which are so arranged in regularity of the vibrations which are produced by the blowing or forcing of the breath through the throat, mouth and nose, and which are determined by der pitch distinguished from high to low and from low to high, which means—what?

DILL—A fish.

KOLB—No! A fish has got nothing to do mit it. Now vas iss a scale? My hand presents a scale.

DILL—It looks like a bunch of bananas.

KOLB—Keep quiet, or you get der whole bunch in der nose. Pay attention! We will commence at der bottom and "do." A little higher comes "re."

DILL—HAT'S my wife.

KOLB—No, that's not your wife.

DILL—I know that. ISS my wife. Don't you think I know my wife when I hear her?

KOLB—Sure, but "re" is not your wife.

DILL—Und I say that iss my wife.

KOLB—If you vill listen I will explain. "Re" is a measure of length.

DILL—Then that is my wife. She iss ALWAYS a measure long.

KOLB—Re may got nothing to do mit our wife—iss a sound. After "re" comes "mi."

DILL—WHAT! You after my wife?

KOLB—N— After "re" comes "mi."

DILL—I like "mi" all right, if you say that you are after my wife I am making one from der flour to bring peace on us.

KOLB—You are misallusioned, Mike. I am not after your wife. I vas explanat on myself if you will listen. It iss not your wife, I will promise you.

DILL—My wife iss a beauti, I woman.

KOLB—By golly, Mike, you make me sore. I know that your wife iss a beautiful woman but at this time I am not talking of your wife.

DILL—But you did.

KOLB—I did not mention.

DILL—Then who did you mention?

KOLB—I mentioned a woman at all. You are a crazy lump of dough-head. I am trying once to make you see if you got all of your senses. As I have told you, re iss a sound. After "re" comes "mi."

DILL—What YOU—AGAIN!

KOLB—, not you—"MI!"

DILL—That's what I said—YOU!

KOLB—No, but I said "mi."

DILL—That's what I said.

KOLB—When I say "mi" I am not speaking of myself.

DILL—Well, ain't YOU—YOURSELF?

KOLB—Sure, but myself has got nothing to do mit "mi."

DILL—Then when you say me, you don't mean yourself.

KOLB—NO.

DILL—Then who do you mean—ME?

KOLB—You make me so mad I could bite my own face. ME iss Me when I say it to you. When I say "MI" to you "MI" iss "MI," not YOU. When YOU say ME to me, ME iss YOU—not "MI"! Understand it?

DILL—NEARLY.

KOLB—Well, that's close enough. "Mi" iss a sound. After "mi" come; "fa," and after "fa" comes "sol"——

DILL—What! Fillet of sole! By golly, that iss a fish for der Kings. Sole iss der finest boneless what iss. If it iss cooked properly. I remember a mess of sole that I ran——

KOLB—Say you little fat quince, listen to der man that iss trying to bore a way into society for you! "Sol" is not a fish.

DILL—What, fillet of sole isn't?

KOLB—Say, you mont on that fish again und I hit you. No, NOT fillet of sole, just plain "sol."

DILL—Oh, mitout tartar sauce.

KOLB—No! "Sol." Then comes "la," "si." See?

DILL—Yes, I see; si, senor.

KOLB—There iss no snore on der end. Just plain si. See?

DILL—Sure, I see.

KOLB—Now, you know what iss a scale—"do," "re," "mi," "fa," "sol," "la," "si," "do." NOW you know what it iss—a scale.

DILL—Sure.

KOLB—What iss it?

DILL—A SCHMELDT.

MARRIED LIFE--THE FOURTH WEEK

Copyright, 1912, by American-Journal-Examiner Great Britain Rights Reserved

By ROBERT SHERBET TURNER.

NOTE.—In all stories you read of "Married Life In the Nineteenth Year," "Why I Left My Home" and all that sort of thing you never hear of the poor husband. Perhaps he is too busy to write; perhaps nobody cares about him anyway. Here for the first time we have a husband giving his views of married life in the way so many women have been doing of late.)

I DON'T know whether or not you remember the last installment of this diary of a husband. I had come to the conclusion then that Lucy did not love me whole-heartedly. My conclusion was based upon the peculiar behavior of Lucy at dinner the night before.

She had done something that I took as an indication of displeasure.

To be brief, she had thrown the soup tureen at my head.

So when I came home the following evening I felt so gloomy that I couldn't say a word. I kept on eating my dinner in silence, conscious all the time of a vague fear in Lucy.

She didn't say a word to give me an opportunity of telling her how sorry I was that she had thrown the tureen at me—not exactly that, but what I mean is that I was sorry I had caused her to feel like throwing things at me.

Just as I was in the middle of dinner, afraid to say a word for fear of offending Lucy, up she got from the table and flounced out of the room, saying over her shoulder:

"I'd as soon dine with a mummy!"

I didn't know what to make of this, but I resolved that the next evening I would do my best to be more cheerful.

Things went pretty tough in the office the next day. Everything went wrong and all the time I was wondering what I had done to offend Lucy.

When I got home to dinner I tried hard to think of something to say that would be cheerful.

"I see Roosevelt has got another delegate," I remarked.

Silence.

"The Giants have a good chance this year," I ventured.

"Chance of what?" snapped Lucy.

"To cop the flag," I said, glad that I had interested my wife at last.

"Please do not use such slang at my table," she coldly responded.

"My" table!

I didn't know what to say.

As a matter of fact it wasn't her table and it wasn't my table.

You see, we had bought our furniture on the installment plan.

I made one more effo t.

"What do you think of Charles Hawtrey?" I asked.

Lucy began to cry.

"You are taunting me, because I never go to the theater now," she cried. "When we were engaged you used to take me once in a while, but I suppose you don't love me any more—if you ever did love me." I should have taken mother's advice."

Then she went upstairs crying.

Lucy will never understand me.

HOW THINGS CAME ABOUT

No. 3.—Eating with a Fork.

PEOPLE did not always eat with a fork.

Even to-day there are some who do not—but never mind that. Perhaps, after a few more seasons [illegible] be doing it.

However, the most of us must admit there are times when we eat with a fork. This was not always thus. While we always had fingers, more or less, we did not always have forks to eat with, and it all came about through a peculiar accident.

Away back when Wubgwhejcat was king of the Aryians every one ate with his fingers, excepting, of course, a few armless wonders from the museum. [illegible] ban to be ten.

Needless to state, Wubgwhejcat was the leader in styles. Whatever he did was good form. If anyone doubted it Wubgwhejcat had his strong-arm [illegible] pass a keen scimeter rapidly between the doubter's ears and shoulders. This removed all doubts, also all doubters.

Wubgwhejcat ate with [illegible]. He was satisfied [illegible] his queens were not they never mentioned. [illegible] Pa, Flora, Ahijiteen or Wubgwhejcat [illegible] was a fellow [illegible] and [illegible] more than one [illegible] Specially [illegible] fants.

[illegible] had been a dance at the Commercial House last Tuesday evening, but Lem Dabney, who was to have been the music, had a sore throat and couldn't play the harmonica. So the dance has been postponed until Lem feels better. Here's hoping that Lem has a speedy recovery as we just can't make our feet behave. Oh, you turkey trot!

Our London correspondent cables us in cipher, saying: "Oscar Hammerstein is again in our midst." We can't just make out the cipher. It might be "in our midst." Either way will go, we guess.

There was some discussion over at the Commercial House bar the other evening as to whether we would ever see fifty again. We have our hopes, but we doubt. If we ever have a roll of such pelfiness.

Miranda Milbanks is at work on a [illegible] when she hopes to have presented on the metropolitan stage. She calls it The Mustard Plaster." It ought to draw well.

Variety may be the spice of life, but for the real, all-wool-and-a-yard-wide thing the Variety Actress is hard to beat.

We know of some news which would give certain folks a fit to print.

Summer will soon be here. You will need a crash suit. We have suits of loud crash and some not so reverberating. All styles. Levy, the Main Street Tailor.—Adv.

The manager of the Beetville baseball club has just purchased two barrels of chlorine of lime. He's going to sprinkle it around the base lines when the umpires make rank decisions, we presume.

We pride ourselves on the deep, non-fading blue of our bluefish. No other fish market in town can [illegible] Shore, Nett & Co.—Adv.

Neb Collins asks us if a certain actress [illegible] order. I to wear [illegible] boarding house [illegible] Grand [illegible]

Our young son, who is just starting to attend Sunday School, says to us last Sabbath, "Pa, have you heard that story about Elijah and the kids? It's a bear." Our young hopeful also says he would hate to live in the Arctic regions, as he'd hate to sit out a six months night to wait for a circus train to arrive.

We are not in favor of woman's suffrage for two reasons. First, how could a lady Mayor chuck the ball out to the umpire in the first game of the season on the home grounds? And, second, see what an awful big rung you'd have to have if she took a notion to throw her hat into it.

[illegible] Cook came into our sanctum yesterday, all out of breath, to tell us the South Pole had been detected. We're running a newspaper, Hope, not teaching a class in ancient history.

After some research we have come to the conclusion that our birthstone is a millstone, and we wear said adornment about our [illegible]

We [illegible] over the advertised Spring [illegible] of tailors' bills, we [illegible] since that last year's Spring and will be much worn by a certain editor. Trousers will be short this year. In fact We can't be alone [illegible] ladies we are [illegible] to keep [illegible] more than one [illegible] Specially [illegible] fants.

THEA-

[illegible] from

[illegible] popular proved productions of [illegible] Mr. Morosco will

[illegible]

The Winning [illegible] question. The success of Mr. Morosco's [illegible] last Summer has encouraged [illegible] to repeat the barrel contained a [illegible] the result that [illegible] absolutely new to stock [illegible] for it, you [illegible] surprised during [illegible] distance—will be [illegible] to make a [illegible] Mr.

[illegible] cousin of the late [illegible] can act, and Mr. Morosco [illegible] the local playgoer [illegible] relationship to deceased celebrities. For a leading man, Henry Mortimer has been engaged, and he is expected to take good care of himself in all of the heroic roles of the hot Summer. Mr. Morosco's stage director will be Charles R. Putnam, who performed similar service for the Boston Museum in the days we still have to talk about. We have Mr. Morosco's solemn promise that the Majestic Theatre will be the centre of considerable activity in theatrical circles.

* * * * * * *

"ALIAS JIMMY VALENTINE" is living up to its reputation—which means that Fred Wright's [illegible] in this musical [illegible] being by every sign that it is [illegible] to stay. "Alias Jimmy Valentine" is comfortably settled [illegible] an extended engagement at the Plymouth and, unless nature reverses [illegible] fails to deliver the play will remain until [illegible] Spring lol are has shed its [illegible]. The success of some plays with Boston audiences is difficult to explain, but there is a very complete answer to the popularity of Mr. Armstrong's drama of prison life and the men who share it. A glance over the plays of two seasons shows that in most cases the dramatist contented himself with the traditional elements that constitute a play. The men and women who moved about on the stage may have been real, but they were, for the most part, ordinary—very ordinary people. The life of plays of this kind are necessarily short, regardless of their dramatic or literary value. Mr. Armstrong has shunned the traditional types in "Alias Jimmy Valentine" and he has [illegible] back upon the traditional themes that are now choking the modern drama. And it is to his boldness in unusual theme and queer people—that he may attribute the overwhelming success of the play that is now sending crowds to the Plymouth. The playgoer, like any other citizen is hungry for new ideas and [illegible] supplies him with both. There is real entertainment at the Plymouth, and the people have found it out.

* * * * * * *

PEOPLE unacquainted with the difficulties that confront the manager and producer of a play will hardly be able to realize the importance which the selection of the right type of actor must necessarily bear on the success or failure of a production. An actor may be a consummate genius so far as his art [illegible] moral gift for picking the right people for his plays. He is certainly a commanding example of the manager who knows [illegible] capabilities—also his limitations. What [illegible] there is never such a thing as an actor "typecast." He seems infallible in that respect, as a k[illegible] of Becky" will prove. While not taking Miss Frances Starr of an atom of credit for her splendid individual performance in this play, one of [illegible] visit to the Hollis was the unmistakable success of every player in the company to the work at hand.

* * * * * * *

THE most beautiful woman of them all will be here tomorrow. He is Julian Eltinge. Mr. Eltinge says, and he ought to know if experience counts for anything, that if ever an age was mad about anything, this is the age, and personal loveliness is the mania. "A beautiful woman is the mistress of all she surveys," said Eltinge as he nearly smothered himself in powder in the interest of his art. "The nation worships her. Pretty faces take the place of art in theatres, in picture galleries and even in literature, so far as [illegible] of to me a volume of which an enormous number had been sold. 'Is the story good?' I asked. 'Not particularly,' he replied, 'but look at the illustrations.' That proved my contention. It is only in the business world that women are required to have any brains. In the home, where intelligence is most needed, attractiveness counts infinitely more. Outside the home, particularly in social and artistic life, the tie that binds men and women together is the tie of Beauty and the Beast." Mr. Eltinge is positive that he utters a great truth. It would be nice to hear from the ladies.

DANGERS OF FAT

HOW FAT AFFECTS THE LIVER

LIVER. Next to the heart, there is no organ of the body more susceptible to an abnormal increase of fatty tissue than the liver. When she liver becomes too fat, its action is impeded, allowing the fat-making foods to make more fat than is needed for normal symmetry. The liver clogged with excess fat, becomes inactive, and, from disease, the nature of the organ undergoes a change. Constipation, headaches, biliousness and similar local disturbances of the system are not the least of the fat man or woman's troubles, for the rolls and layers of fat on all portions of the body increase, clogging other organs, paving the way to obesity. All this can be avoided, if the proper remedy is resorted to at once. Nothing ever discovered for the removal of fat is so effective as the famous Marmola Prescription. However, from the same high authority came Marmola Prescription Tablets, containing all the elements of the sure, harmless Prescription and offering a more convenient means for reducing to normal weight at the rate of 10 to 15 oz. a day, without dieting, exercise or resulting wrinkles and flabbiness. Marmola Prescription Tablets are [illegible] drug stores. Farmer Bldg. Detroit, Mich. at 75c. the case.

A Wife's Confession--By Guy de Maupassant

My friend, you have asked me to tell you the most striking event in my life. I am old, and have had many children, and I am free to make a confession to you. But promise me that you will never reveal my name.

I have had many adventures, as you know. I have had quite a life. I was very fond of love. Love was for me the life of the soul, just as the air is the life of the body. I would have preferred to die rather than to exist without affection, without having some one who was always thinking of me. Women often say they can love but once with all the strength of their heart. I have often been so desperately in love that I thought it would never end, but the burning died out naturally like a fire lacking fuel.

I had been married a year to the Baron Comte Herve de Ker—a Breton of ancient family. My husband was tall in stature, elegant and a really fine gentleman in his manners. But he lacked intelligence. He spoke in a positive manner, and uttered trenchant opinions. He created the impression that his mind was full of really made views, instilled into him by his father and mother, who had themselves got them from their ancestors. He never hesitated, but at once expressed his narrow-minded views without embarrassment, and without realizing that there might be other ways of looking at things. One had the feeling that his brain was hermetically sealed, that no ideas which had not come to him by hereditary right could penetrate it, and that, like a heavy door, it shut out everything, as through a house with double doors and windows.

To commit love we selected as a dwelling in the midst of a desolate forest of oaks. It was a large white house with green shutters, surrounded by enormous trees, with tufts of moss on them that recalled old men's white beards. The park, a real forest, was inclosed by a wall, called in that district a "boundary," and in it were several large ponds full of reeds and lilies. A grass path between the two, at the edge of a stream which connected them, led to a little hut for shooting wild ducks.

We had, in addition to our ordinary staff of servants, a keeper, a sort of brute, devoted to my husband to the death, and a chambermaid, almost a friend, passionately attached to me. I had brought her back from Spain when we were there years before. She was a foundling. She might have been taken for a gypsy, with her dusky skin, her dark eyes, her hair, thick as a wood and always waving around her forehead. She was then sixteen years old, but she looked twenty.

The Autumn was beginning. We had a great many shooting parties, sometimes on neighboring estates, sometimes on our own; and I noticed a young man, the Baron de C——, whose visits at our home became singularly frequent. They ceased to come. I thought no more about it, but I perceived that my husband had changed in his demeanor toward me.

He seemed taciturn and preoccupied. He did not kiss me, and, in spite of the fact that he seldom came into my room, as I insisted on separate apartments, in order that I might live my own life occasionally, I often heard a furtive step drawing near my door at night, and retire again within a few minutes.

As my window was on the ground floor, I thought I had also often heard some one prowling in the shadow around the house. I told my husband about it, and, having looked at me intently for some seconds, he answered:

"It is nothing—it is the watchman."

Now, one evening, just after dinner, Herve, who appeared to be extraordinarily cheerful, with a saturnine sort of cheerfulness, said to me:

"Paquita threw her arms round the dead man, kissing his eyes and his mouth and seeking his dead lips with her own."

"Would you like to spend three hours out with me [illegible] to see if a fox we [illegible] is prowling [illegible]

I was surprised. I stated that as he knew I was afraid of the night he had no reason, I added, to be trifling.

"Why, certainly, my friend. I must tell you that I could hunt the wolf and the wild boar as well as a man; so it was quite natural that he should suggest this shooting expedition to me.

But my husband, all of a sudden, cast a curiously nervous look; and all the evening he kept rising up and sitting down feverishly.

About [illegible] he suddenly said to me: "Are you ready?"

I [illegible] was starting [illegible] myself.

We went out with buckets on our shoulders. He showed [illegible] astonishment [illegible] noticed.

"[illegible] dear friend, that will be enough [illegible]

[illegible] seconds he added in a peculiar tone:

"You [illegible] of splendid presence of mind!"

I burst out laughing.

"I? Why, pray? Presence of mind because I am going to kill a fox? But what do you mean, my friend?"

And we quietly made our way across the park.

[illegible] the household was [illegible] cannot [illegible] a little [illegible] other [illegible] When we [illegible] he slowly [illegible] that I was [illegible]

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS

MISS MARY MORSTAN, a charming young woman, applies to Sherlock Holmes for aid in explaining the disappearance of her father nearly ten years before. Holmes and his friend, Dr. Watson, agree to keep an appointment with her for the following evening. Miss Morstan receives a letter making an appointment with her from the mysterious unknown, and tells Holmes and Watson about the strange circumstances surrounding her father's disappearance. She also tells them that she has received a valuable present of pearls every year since the disappearance.

CHAPTER II.

"You will excuse my anxiety," he remarked, airily.

[illegible] long had suspicions as to that valve. I am delighted to hear that they are unwarranted. And your father, Miss Morstan, refrained from throwing a strain upon his heart, he might have been alive now."

I could have struck the man across the face, but was at this callous and off-hand reference to so delicate a matter. Miss Morstan sat down, and her face grew white to the lips. "I knew in my heart that he was dead," said she.

"I can give you every information," said he, "and what is more, I can do you justice, and I will do, whatever brother Bartholomew may say. I am so glad to have your friends here, not only as an escort to you, but also as witnesses to what I am about to do and say. The time of day show a bold front to brother Bartholomew. Let us have no outsiders—no police or officials. We can settle everything satisfactorily among ourselves, without any interference. Nothing would annoy brother Bartholomew more than any publicity." He sat down upon a low office and blinked at us inquiringly with his weak watery blue eyes.

"For my part," said Holmes, "I promise you absolute secrecy."

I nodded to say will go no further.

"That is well!" That is well!" said he. "May I offer you a glass of Chianti, Miss Morstan? or of Tokay? I keep no other wines. Shall I open a bottle? No? Well, then, I trust that you have no objection to tobacco smoke, to the mild, balmy odor of the Eastern tobacco. I am a little nervous, and I find my hookah an invaluable sedative." He applied a taper to the great bowl, and the smoke bubbled merrily through the rose-water. We sat all three in a semi-circle, with our heads advanced, and our chins upon our hands, while the strange, jerky little fellow, with his high, shining head, puffed uneasily in the centre.

"When I first determined to make this communication to you," said he, "I might have given you my address, but I feared that you might disregard my request and bring unpleasant people with you. I took the liberty, therefore, of making an appointment in such a way that my man Williams might be able to see you first. I have complete confidence in his discretion, and he had orders, if he were dissatisfied, to proceed no further in the matter. You will excuse these precautions, but I am a man of somewhat retiring, and, I might even say, refined tastes, and there is nothing more unaesthetic than a policeman. I have a natural shrinking from all forms of rough materialism. I seldom come in contact with the rough crowd. I live, as you see, with some little atmosphere of elegance around me. I may call myself a patron of the arts. It is my weakness. The landscape is a genuine Corot, and, though a connoisseur might perhaps throw a doubt upon that Salvator Rosa, there cannot be the least question about the Bouguereau. I am partial to the modern French school."

"You will excuse me, Mr. Sholto," said Miss Morstan, "but I am here at your request to learn something which you desire to tell me. It is very late, and I should desire the interview to be as short as possible."

"At the best it must take some time," he answered; "for we shall certainly have to go to Norwood and see brother Bartholomew. We shall all go and try if we can get the better of brother Bartholomew. He is very angry with me for taking the course which has seemed right to me. I had quite high words with him last night. You cannot imagine what a terrible fellow he is when he is angry."

"If we are to go to Norwood it would perhaps be as well to start at once," I ventured to remark.

He laughed until his ears were quite red. "That would hardly do," he cried. "I don't know what he would say if I brought you in that sudden way. No; I must prepare you by showing you how we all stand to each other. In the first place, I must tell you that there are several points in the story of which I am myself ignorant. I can only lay the facts before you as far as I know them myself.

"My father was, as you may have guessed, Major John Sholto, once of the Indian army. He retired some eleven years ago, and came to live at Pondicherry Lodge in Upper Norwood. He had prospered in India, and brought back with him a considerable sum of money, a large collection of valuable curiosities, and a staff of native servants. With these advantages he bought himself a house, and lived in great luxury. My twin-brother Bartholomew and I were the only children.

"I very well remember the sensation which was caused by the disappearance of Captain Morstan. We read the details in the papers, and, knowing that he had been a friend of our father's, we discussed the case freely in his presence. He used to join in our speculations as to what could have happened. Never for an instant did we suspect that he had the whole secret hidden in his own breast—that of all men he alone knew the fate of Arthur Morstan.

"We did know, however, that some mystery—some positive danger—overhung our father. He was very fearful of going out alone, and he always employed two prize fighters to act as porters at Pondicherry Lodge. Williams, who drove you to-night, was one of them. He was once a lightweight champion of England. Our father would never tell us what it was he feared, but he had a most marked aversion to men with wooden legs. On one occasion he actually fired his revolver at a wooden-legged man, who proved to be a harmless tradesman canvassing for orders. We had to pay a large sum to hush the matter up. My brother and I used to think this a mere whim of my father's, but events have since led us to change our opinion.

"Early in 1882 my father received a letter from India which was a great shock to him. He nearly fainted at the breakfast table when he opened it, and from that day he sickened to his death. What was in the letter we could never discover, but I could see as he held it that it was short and written in a scrawling hand. He had suffered for years from an enlarged spleen, but he now became rapidly worse, and toward the end of April we were informed that he was beyond all hope, and that he wished to make a last communication to us.

"When we entered his room he was propped up with pillows and breathing heavily. He besought us to lock the door and to come upon either side of the bed. Then, grasping our hands, he made a remarkable statement to us, in a voice which was broken as much by emotion as by pain. I shall try and give it to you in his own very words.

"'I have only one thing,' he said, 'which weighs upon my mind at this supreme moment. It is my treatment of poor Morstan's orphan. The

At the end of about an hour, as neither [illegible] expressive silence of this kind, Andrée said in a low tone:

"You hate me very much this way."

He shook as if [illegible] bitten him, and without [illegible] to look at her, he said: "I am quite [illegible] decision."

[illegible] more than ever.

"Where I was beginning to get drowsy [illegible] put [illegible] arm, and, in a hoarse [illegible] he said:

"Do you see him over there under the trees?"

I looked in vain: I could distinguish nothing. And slowly Herve now cocked his gun, all the time fixing his eyes on my face.

I was preparing to flee, when suddenly, thirty paces in front of us, appeared in the full light of the moon a man who was hurrying forward with [illegible] movements, his body bent, as if he were trying to escape.

I was so astounded that I uttered a loud cry; and [illegible] I could turn around, there was a flash before my eyes; I heard a deafening report, and I saw the man rolling on the ground like a wolf [illegible] a shot.

I was terrified, almost beside myself, and I uttered dreadful shrieks. Then a furious hand—it was Herve's—seized me by the throat. I was being thrown down on the ground, then lifted up in his strong arms. He ran, carrying me, till we reached the body lying on the grass and he threw me on top of it violently, as if he wanted to break my head.

I felt it was all over with me: he was going to kill me, and he had just raised his heel to my forehead, when, in his turn, he was gripped, and fell down before I could realize what had happened.

I sat up abruptly, and I saw kneeling on top of him Paquita, my maid, clinging to him with desperate energy, like a wildcat, tearing his beard, his mustache, and the skin of his face.

Then, as if another idea had suddenly taken possession of her, she rose, and flinging herself on the corpse, she threw her arms round the dead man, kissing his eyes and his mouth, seeking his dead lips with her own, trying to find in them a breath and a long, long, lover's kiss.

My husband, picking himself up, gazed at me. He understood, and falling at my feet, said:

"Oh! forgive me, my darling, I suspected you, and I killed this girl's lover. It was my watchman that deceived me."

But I was watching the strange kisses of that dead man and that living woman, her sobs and her writhings of despairing love.

cursed greed which has been my besetting sin through life has withheld from her the treasure, half at least of which should have been hers. And yet I have made no use of it myself—so blind and foolish a thing is avarice. The mere feeling of possession has been so dear to me that I could not bear to share it with another. See that chaplet tipped with pearls beside the quinine bottle. Even that I could not bear to part with, although I had got it out with the design of sending it to her. You, my sons, will give her a fair share of the Agra treasure. But send her nothing—not even the chaplet—until I am gone. After all, men have been as bad as this and have recovered.

"'I will tell you how Morstan died,' he continued. 'He had suffered for years from a weak heart, but he concealed it from every one. I alone knew it. When, in India, he and I, through a remarkable chain of circumstances, came into possession of a considerable treasure, I brought it over to England, and on the night of Morstan's arrival he came straight over here to claim his share. He walked over from the station, and was admitted by my faithful old Lal Chowdar, who is now dead. Morstan and I had a difference of opinion as to the division of the treasure, and we came to heated words. Morstan had sprung out of his chair in a paroxysm of anger, when he suddenly pressed his hand to his side, his face turned a dusky hue, and he fell backward, cutting his head against the corner of the treasure chest. When I stooped over him I found, to my horror, that he was dead.

"'For a long time I sat half-distracted, wondering what I should do. My first impulse was, of course, to call for assistance; but I could not but recognize that there was every chance that I would be accused of his murder. His death at the moment of a quarrel, and the gash in his head, would be black against me. Again, an official inquiry could not be made without bringing out some facts about the treasure, which I was particularly anxious to keep secret. He had told me that no soul upon earth knew where he had gone. There seemed to be no necessity why any soul ever should know.

"'I was still pondering over the matter, when, looking up, I saw my servant, Lal Chowdar, in the doorway. He stole in, and bolted the door behind him. "Do not fear, sahib,' he said. "No one need know that you have killed him. Let us hide him away, and who is the wiser?" "I did not kill him," said I. Lal Chowdar shook his head, and smiled, "I heard it all, sahib," said he. "I heard you quarrel, and I heard the blow. But my lips are sealed. All are asleep in the house. Let us put him away together." That was enough to decide me. If my own servant could not believe my innocence, how could I hope to make it good before twelve foolish tradesmen in a jury box? Lal Chowder and I disposed of the body that night, and within a few days the London papers were full of the mysterious disappearance of Captain Morstan. You will see from what I say that I can hardly be blamed in the matter. My fault lies in the fact that we concealed, not only the body, but also the treasure, and that I have clung to Morstan's share as well as my own. I wish you, therefore, to make restitution. Put your cars down to my mouth. The treasure is hidden in'—— at this instant a horrible change came over his expression; his eyes glared wildly, his jaw dropped, and he yelled, in a voice which I can never forget, 'Keep him out! Keep him out!' We both stared round at the window behind us upon which his gaze was fixed. A face was looking in at us out of the darkness. We could see the whitening of the nose where it was pressed against the glass. It was a bearded, hairy face, with wild, cruel eyes and an expression of concentrated malevolence. My brother and I rushed toward the window, but the man was gone. When we returned to my father, his head had dropped and his pulse had ceased to beat.

"We searched the garden that night, but found no sign of the intruder, save that just under the window a single footmark was visible in the flowerbed. But for that one trace, we might have thought that our imaginations had conjured up that wild fierce face. We soon, however, had another and a more striking proof that there were secret agencies at work all around us. The window of my father's room was found open in the morning, his cupboards and boxes had been rifled, and upon his chest was fixed a torn piece of paper with the words, 'The sign of the four' scrawled across it. What the phrase meant, or who our secret visitor may have been, we never knew. As far as we can judge, none of my father's property had been actually stolen, though everything had been turned out. My brother and I naturally associated this peculiar incident with the fear which haunted my father during his life; but it is still a complete mystery to us.

"The little man stopped to relight his hookah, and puffed thoughtfully for a few moments. We had all sat absorbed, listening to his extraordinary narrative. At the short account of her father's death Miss Morstan had turned deathly white, and for a moment I feared that she was about to faint. She rallied, however, on drinking a glass of water which I quietly poured out for her from a Venetian carafe upon the side table. Sherlock Holmes leaned back in his chair with an abstracted expression and the lids drawn over his glittering eyes. As I glanced at him I could not but think how on that very day he had complained bitterly of the commonplaceness of life. Here, at least, was a problem which would tax his sagacity to the utmost. When I looked from one to the other of them I felt that, in spite of the weird and dreadful character of the narrative which we had listened to, I would rather be the centre of those three pairs of keen eyes than occupy the most comfortable armchair in London. Presently, with an effort, Holmes shook off his reverie, and then continued to blow those thick wreaths of tobacco-smoke which showed that he was in one of his most communicative moods.

"My brother and I, [illegible] imagine, much [illegible] father had spoil[illegible] without discov[illegible] dening to [illegible] very lips [illegible] judge the splend[illegible] chaplet which he [illegible] my brother Bart[illegible] cusion. "Oh, yes, you do, McMurdo," cried Sherlock Holmes, genially. "I don't think you can have forgotten me. Don't you remember the amateur who fought three rounds with you at Alison's rooms on the night of your benefit four years back?"

"Not Mr. Sherlock Holmes?" roared the prize-fighter. "God's truth, how could I have mistook you? "You see, Watson, if all else fails me I have still one of the scientific professions open to me," said Holmes, laughing. "Our friend won't keep us out in the cold now, I am sure."

The Metamorphosis of Mr. Van Ness

This Story, by Mrs. Louise Gray May, of No. 68 Magnolia Avenue, Jersey City, Won First Prize in the Recent Competition Conducted by the New Jersey State Federation of Women's Clubs.

IT is a strange story, the telling of which can do no harm to any one. I am an old man now, with ten years of borrowed time added to the allotted three score and ten. The other participant in the crime has long been dead. As he afterward lived a respectable and useful life and the world became better for his having lived in it, I have never regretted shielding him from an ignoble death. Anyhow, I do not believe in the popular interpretation of "An eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth."

I first met Anthony Van Ness—for so I will call him—at college and we soon became inseparable. He was a queer looking fellow. Shaggy black brows met over an abnormal Roman nose, giving his face a fierce, repulsive look. In addition to this he had a huge birthmark, bright red in color, which almost covered his right cheek. Like most people ill-favored by Nature, he was morbidly sensitive. The gay college youths could not penetrate his sullen reserve, and he made few friends, while I was a general favorite. I was fine looking in those days, tall, fair and graceful.

People wondered at our strange infatuation and dubbed us (when together) "Beauty and the Beast." But I found Anthony Van Ness to be of a deep and affectionate nature, and his devotion to me was like that of a faithful dog. It is likely our affection would have died the death of most violent youthful friendships, when both are of the same sex, had it not been for one incident. It was in our second year when during a swimming contest I had foolishly ventured out beyond my depth.

At great risk and peril to his own life Van Ness saved me from drowning. I was touched by this tribute of his loyalty and never forgot the debt I owed him. Shortly after this he left college. The uncle by whose bounty he was receiving his education died suddenly, leaving him unprovided for. As he had no parents, he was forced to make his own way in the world.

I bade him an affectionate adieu and reminded him that the life he had saved was his, and that I would befriend him in any adversity. For some time we corresponded regularly. He went West, but did not prosper, and the old resentment crept into his letters. He attributed his lack of success to his personal defects. At one time he wrote: "You who are handsome as a young Apollo cannot guess what it is to carry with you a face so hideous that men shrink from you and children, frightened, cling closer to their mothers' skirts." I was shocked at such utterances. I knew he exaggerated the case, and wrote him what comfort I could, trying to win him from his melancholy.

Soon his letters ceased entirely. Time wore on and changes came into my own life. My father during his lifetime had been a prominent physician and surgeon, and my grandfather before him. It was my mother's desire that I should follow their profession, but the idea was distasteful to me, for at that time I thought more of the personal discomfort and hardship of such a calling and little of its honor and opportunities for self-sacrifice. However, to please the dear woman—whom I passionately loved—I persevered, and at last obtained my degree. I remember how delighted she looked that eventful night when my degree was handed to me, the color coming and going in her cheeks, the tender light which shone from her eyes; and I have never regretted that I was able to give her so much happiness.

Soon after I reached my majority I was a full-fledged M. D. with a snug little fortune besides. The latter quite turned my head, and before settling down to the arduous duties of my profession I decided to go abroad and see life. I traveled extensively wherever fancy led me—up the lotus-laden Nile, roamed throughout India, rode the docile camels, winked at the Sphinx, climbed the lofty Alps, listened to the latest tenor at La Scala, paid my respects to the Vatican, took in all the art exhibitions at Brussels, Berlin and foggy old London, wandered among the ruined castles and cathedrals along the Rhine, in Cologne, Scotland and Italy, dropped a little money at Monte Carlo—but Paris proved my Waterloo. There I fell in with a lot of wild fellows and spent a couple of years leisurely sowing my wild oats. Awakening one fine morning I found that I had little more than enough money left to pay my passage back to America.

Sadder and wiser, I returned to New York and hung up my shingle on the crowded East Side. I prospered beyond my most sanguine expectations, but the work was disagreeable. I loathed the stuffy tenements, the dirty children, the nauseous sick rooms, and decided to try something else.

As I said before, I was a good looking chap, my mother having impressed that fact upon me from earliest childhood. Moreover, I was extremely careful about the minor details of dress, perhaps giving more attention to these matters than usually occupies the masculine mind, but I was anxious to please my widowed mother in everything, as I was the sole object of her care and devotion. I often laughingly told my dainty little mother that with her refined tastes and elegance of manners had she lived a few centuries ago she would have made a charming acquisition to that exclusive and brilliant coterie that graced l'Hotel de Rambouillet, the hospitable home of the Marquise de Rambouillet, and whose influence did so much toward rescuing the French court from its coarseness and unworthy social standards.

"Behold," I said, "your own mother would not know you."

It became a kind of hobby with me to study the people with whom I came in contact, socially and professionally, and observe how little thought was expended on their general make-up. Everybody knows that a good appearance is one of the best passports through life. I began to observe that even facial defects could be remedied if one so desired. I made some startling experiments in surgery, perfected myself in certain branches of science and opened a dermatological institute. At first I was looked upon with suspicion, for dermatology was new in those days, but as I advertised extensively and my methods were sure and ingenious I had before long an excellent business in correcting the blunders of Nature.

Seated one day in my private office glancing mechanically over a Chicago paper, which had been placed among others on the desk, my attention became riveted by glaring headlines telling of a foul murder which had taken place.

A prominent banker had been shot by one of his employes, whom he had surprised in the act of robbing the safe. The thief had escaped, but the banker lived long enough to write the name of his assassin—Anthony Van Ness. He was described as a dark man, with heavy meeting eyebrows, Roman nose and large birthmark on right cheek. Ten thousand dollars reward was offered for his capture. I read the article over (it was two columns long) three times before I realized what it meant. Then my brain seemed on fire and my eyes bursting from their sockets.

Anthony Van Ness—a thief?—a murderer? No, no—there must be some mistake. Anthony Van Ness, the warm-hearted, brave, affectionate fellow who had saved my life. He a murderer? Never! I must be going mad. When I became more calm I discovered that the paper was two weeks old. Two weeks—he must already be languishing in jail, for with that face detection was positive.

I was about to make a journey to the nearest newsstand for fresh papers, when there came a gentle tap at the door. My hand was already on the knob, and I turned it quickly and beheld a woman in shabby widow's weeds. My first impulse was to dismiss her roughly, but something in the deep habiliments of woe struck me as significant, and I drew her quickly inside, locking and bolting the door after me. She gave a startled glance around, her body swaying with emotion, but I reassured her.

"Madam," I said, "we are alone. Any conversation you may wish to hold with me will be strictly confidential."

At this she threw back her veil and I beheld the haggard face of Anthony Van Ness. When the chairs and table, which to my distorted imagination seemed to be executing a war dance around the room, had subsided into their proper places I listened to his story.

It was the old tale of poverty and temptation. "The race was so unfair—his employer had so much and he so little—he could take just a trifle—so very small—his employer would not miss it—he could go to a new country—perhaps the struggle would not be so hard—then came the discovery—the grapple—he did not mean to kill him—indeed, he did not—he secured this disguise and came to me, his only friend."

"And what can I do?" I interrupted hoarsely.

"Do," he hissed, and his manner was that of a maniac—"do—you can do everything. You see before you a man whose whole life has been stunted and warped by Nature. Change these accursed features. Rid me of this execrable birthmark. It is your profession—your life work."

All this time I had paced the floor restlessly. The question was not would I do it—but could I.

"And if I fail?" I said quietly.

"With you, Frederick, there is no such word as fail."

Before another half hour had elapsed I had my patient closeted in a small room adjoining the office. It was fitted up luxuriously [illegible] used by me for such cases as required [illegible] supervision. I decided to begin [illegible] He placed himself entirely in [illegible] called all the powers of reas[illegible] my aid.

I first turned my attention to [illegible] vertical incision was made through [illegible] of the skin and the flesh laid back; [illegible] either side; then with my electrical instrument [illegible] the humped part of the bone was ground down to purely Grecian outline. The skin was then folded back and the bandage put on. In the same way I treated the cheek bones, which were prominent like an Indian's. An incision was made under each eye, the superfluous bone ground down and the contour made beautifully round. Day by day the entire face was remodeled. I became absorbed in my work. New ideas came to me. The [illegible] birthmark was a thing of the past. In place of the shaggy brows were delicately penciled lines—hair and brows being changed by chemicals to that golden hue latterly affected by the demi-monde. The ears, which formerly stood out on either side in a ridiculous manner, were laid close to the head by snipping the cartilage at the back.

Heretofore in my practice I had only been accustomed to changing such features as did not conform with my patient's idea of beauty and symmetry.

Now it became absolutely necessary in order to make the disguise complete to change every feature of the entire face. For this reason I was obliged to sacrifice the white, even teeth, which had been the chief charm of Anthony Van Ness.

By extracting, filling and other subtleties of the dentist's art I altered the expression of the mouth visibly. More than a month elapsed before the bandages could be taken off, then there were scars to eradicate. By electricity the absorption of the cicatricial tissues was promoted, and in little more than two months I led Van Ness before the cheval mirror and drew aside the cloth which had enveloped it. "Behold," I said; "your own mother would not know you."

He gave one swift, frightened look, and as if fascinated, looked again, long and searchingly. Then with a wild, glad cry he threw himself at my feet, covering me with kisses and muttering incoherently: "You are my preserver—my savior—all things are possible now—life, hope and love—love."

"Ah, ha," I laughed, "so there is a woman in the case."

"I never saw her but once," he rambled on—"the woman with the pale face and auburn hair."

A week later, in an outfit I had provided for him, and with a small gift of money he left me. We agreed to have no further communication with each other—too much was at stake. In case of his own death he would endeavor to let me know.

I never saw him again. For a time the papers were filled with news of the persistent search for him. One clue after another was followed without success and I trembled for his safety. Gradually the case was dropped altogether, the vigilance of the Chicago police receiving the same derision they did afterward in the famous Snell murder.

Years passed. I often fancied he must be dead or that my most wonderful dermatological experiment existed only in my imagination. It was not until I was getting well along in years that the following note came to me:

"Dear Beauty:

"You have kept your secret well. I cannot live the night through. Have ordered notice of death sent you. The Beast."

Well I remembered the familiar sobriquets. Youthful memories thronged upon me and I wept. Two weeks later a Chicago paper came to me, addressed in delicate feminine chirography. The marked paragraph contained the death notice of one Gilbert Randall for over twenty years a prominent and influential citizen. Of humble and obscure parentage, he had made his way to the Middle West, and by industry and integrity had amassed a fortune and placed himself among the foremost of Chicago's self-made men.

So under a new name he had gone back to the scene of his crime and thrown himself under the very eyes of the law. Verily, the metamorphosis had been complete. I often speculated as to whether he had married, and if so had ever told his wife of his life's secret, but the latter I was never destined to know.

Some years later I decided to visit Chicago. I had never traveled much since that memorable trip abroad, and thought the change would benefit my rapidly failing health. I spent a couple of weeks viewing the delights of this wonderful city of mushroom growth, and incidentally hearing much in praise of the goodness and generosity of the late Gilbert Randall.

Seated one day near the entrance to Lincoln Park, I was watching the throng of wealth and fashion passing on the beautiful Lake Shore Drive. I had been sight-seeing all day and was tired and warm, but the breeze from the lake is cool, even in midsummer. One brougham more handsomely appointed than the rest contained a woman no longer young. Something about the magnificent lines of her figure and the graceful poise of her head attracted my attention. I turned to a gray-coated officer near and said: "Can you tell me who that woman is?"

"It is the widow of Gilbert Randall, sir," he answered reverently.

She turned and I saw her face, pale with a rare clear pallor, framed in a wealth of sun-kissed auburn hair.

APPLES IN EDEN - - - - - - By Louise Heilgers

THERE have always been apples in Eden since the world began. First the flower, then the fruit turning from green to russet brown, apples to be plucked by spring to and enjoyed by man—the apples of ...en have done all enjoyment of life.

...he. "It is possible, old is a garden with love for an ...ou some small return always there are fresh apples ...hat which is still o... branches of its trees, and al... remarked ...ee fresh people to pluck them, and ...the ...ds ...e years slip round.

And as ... years slip some people go out of the little ...ocket gate that leads from the orchard, but ...hers come in, so that always the air is full of the whisperings and sighings of the lovers and the leaves.

There are those who will tell you that Eden was lost ages ago, but it is not has long since been regained. Ask any couple you meet wandering in love's orchard where it is, and they will answer, as with one voice, "Here!"

Yes, Eden still endures and there are still apples in Eden. Listen, and you may hear one or two fall from a tree to the ground.

They were husband and wife, and she had given him a child. That alone is the greatest proof of a woman's love any man can bestow upon him. But she thought and did not care. He was older than she was, and she thought she married him for his money.

Also there was another man—a younger man than he—whom she had thrown over to marry him. He thought she had thrown her first love over because he was poor. He refused to believe that in reality it was because she did not love.

And if for a spell they wandered in Eden together, it was because even his pride could not resist her rose and white beauty of youth. And he forebode for a little while to question why she kissed, but was content only to realize that she did.

And presently the little serpent-like thought twisted persistently in his brain: "She loves you for what you can give her, not for yourself." He forgot that she might find Eden sweet to wander in with a strong man at her side. He remembered only that his hair was gray. There was no romance in gray hair. At times he suffered from rheumatism, and who could love a man with rheumatism? So he took her away from the orchard back into the world where there are no apples, green and red, hanging upon the trees, where there are no lovers' arms entwined, to be met. And he locked his love away behind his pride, and hid it securely from the prying eyes of the world. He even hid it from his wife, and so successfully that she thought he was tired of her. Her pride was hurt, but for a long while she tried to win him back. Unsuccessfully; for when she donned her prettiest frock he thought it was to please the other man. When she strove to win him by laughter and the lighter lures of love, he thought it was her conscience that reproached her and unwound her arms from about his neck.

So presently, chilled, she fell away from him, and because she was a young woman and very pretty, and because her husband's great wealth made her, without any trouble on her own part, a person of consequence, she managed, in spite of her husband's unaccountable indifference to her attractions, to have a good time and enjoy herself considerably.

And gradually the sharp ache about her heart began to dull, and she found herself thinking less and less about the man she had married. She forgot to cry about his coldness or to worry about his unresponsiveness; his aloofness troubled her no longer.

Twenty-five and pretty and the world at one's feet, the cold gray husband faded presently into the background—a background of indifference of his own making. And, as he faded into the remote recesses of her memory, it was perhaps inevitable that—something in the way of those little Swiss chalet barometers, you know the kind I mean, with a little wooden husband who comes out when it is going to be wet and a little wife who comes out when it is going to be fine—the other man should come forward and take the place in her thoughts her husband had originally occupied. He was young, he was handsome, he was ardent, he was all the things her husband should have been and was not.

His walked in Eden, but not with the same man. And there were fresh apples hanging upon the trees and fresh lovers wandering arms entwined and the air was full of whisperings and rustlings and sighs and happy laughter. Oh, it is a grand thing to walk in Eden with a man by one's side.

And then Fate decreed that all three of them, the cold gray husband, the young brown lover and she herself, should find themselves caught in a squall in a little boat on the Lake of Lucerne. You know how these Summer squalls come up suddenly. A turquoise sky turns black and the little Summer waves turn to big angry ones and there is a howling wind and sometimes death blows with it. The boat overturned. She was struggling among the threatening green waters. Presently she found herself clinging desperately to the keel of the boat. A little way off the boatman, a brave youth, clutched at two drowning, stunned bodies—the bodies of men neither of whom could swim. He could not hold both. He was calling to her. "Which, Madame?" he shouted hoarsely. And already his grasp had loosened on the husband. He was a lover, too, you see, and had walked in Eden.

"No, no!" she heard herself shriek. "Not him, the—the other!"

But she had never hated a man more than when, afterward, the cold gray husband, turned into a passionate lover, kissed her hands. "Now, at last, I know that you love me," he told her, over and over again.

He was wrong. When she had loved him he had believed her cold and now that she hated him he believed that she loved him. To her dying day she never knew why, loving the other man, she had saved her husband. It must have been some primitive instinct of a savage woman at bay—at bay for her own.

* * *

Well, there are still apples left in Eden, as I said before, but it is not given to us all to walk there at the same time.

WHEN I WAS MAD - - -By Fritz Hansstaengel

I HAD rendered a railroad official some slight service, and, to show his gratitude, he gave me a railroad key which opened all reserved compartments. As these compartments as a rule are empty, it was, of course, quite a handy thing to be able to open them and make use of them whenever I wanted to travel alone.

A few days later while traveling I used my key to open a reserved compartment in which I unfortunately found a passenger asleep. "Evidently he must possess a key, too," I thought.

When we had been traveling about half an hour the train stopped, and my fellow passenger jumped up.

"If I had a thousand square miles of land," he said, with a laugh, "I would sow them all in oats and make you a present of the crop."

With these strange words he opened the door of the compartment which I had forgotten to look and left the train.

When the train stopped the next time I was not a little surprised when the door was opened by a gentleman in black, who asked me to get out.

I was not quite sure if the railroad man had had any right to give me the key, so I said nothing about it, but got out, and asked rather timidly: "I suppose you are connected with the railroad?"

"I——Yes, I am."

"Will I have to pay a fine?"

"No; but you will have to come with me."

"But then I shall miss the train."

"That does not matter. There is a faster train in less than an hour."

"That may be so, but it seems rather strange to stop me from continuing my journey. I am very willing to pay a fine for having traveled in a reserved compartment, and when I give you my card and address it ought to satisfy you."

"No, I will have to take you into court," he said, and pushed me rather roughly through the waiting room to the front of the station, where a carriage was waiting.

"Please get into this carriage," he said, curtly.

"I will be hanged if I do," I replied.

I had barely said so when two other men appeared from somewhere and forcibly put me inside the carriage, whereupon the trio entered and the coachman whipped up the horses.

For a long while I racked my brain to find out what all this meant, but at last the truth began to dawn upon me, and my hair stood on end at the thought. The man who was sleeping in the compartment when I entered was insane. I had enabled him to get away, and now I was supposed to be the patient.

"I suppose you are taking me to some hospital," I suggested.

"Oh, no; just to a sanitarium for nervous people."

"And what do you take me for?"

"A rather harmless individual, suffering from a fixed idea."

"And what is this fixed idea, if I may ask?"

"You imagine yourself to be Baron Rothschild."

"I see."

After a while the carriage stopped and we were received by the manager of the sanitarium, Dr. Fuchs, an old college friend of mine.

"So you have accompanied the patient here, Victor," he exclaimed, rather surprised. "I thought he was coming alone."

The gentleman in black gave Dr. Fuchs a sign, which caused him to look at me more closely.

"Will you please walk into my office," he said.

I followed Dr. Fuchs willingly enough, and as soon as the door had closed behind us he looked at me sharply.

"Well, Baron," he said, "how many shares may I buy for you on the Paris Bourse? The shares of the Bagdad-Damascus Railroad are quoted at 250, but perhaps you wish us to run them up a little higher yet?"

I thought the man was mad, and began to look for something with which to defend myself in case he should attack me.

"Here is the annual report of the Rio-Tinto," he went on, handing me a blank sheet of paper.

I remembered my "fixed idea" and burst out laughing.

"You may save yourself any further trouble, Hans," I said, "for I am neither drunk nor mad."

And I told him just what had happened.

"Well, I must say, you have placed me in a nice hole," he said. "In the next room three alienists are waiting to examine the patient you have turned loose. My business will be ruined if the truth leaks out, so to save me you will have to go on playing your part until the examination is over."

At first I protested, but finally I gave in, and three minutes later the three experts were at me.

Dr. Fuchs introduced them as well-known financiers, and for a whole hour I had to play Baron Rothschild.

When the alienists had left Dr. Fuchs told me that two of them had declared me hopelessly insane, while the third left me a little hope of recovery.

I hurried back to the station, entered the first compartment handy, and, strangely enough, there was a fellow passenger asleep in the farthest corner.

The train started. The man woke up. Good Lord! it was the same passenger I had met in the morning, the insane patient.

"Do you come from abroad?" I asked.

"Oh, no," he replied, "I have been in Berlin to buy a castle on the Rhine."

"I suppose I have the pleasure of addressing Baron Rothschild?"

"Yes, sir."

At the next station another passenger entered our compartment.

"Take off your hat!" ordered the "Baron."

"I don't see why!"

Then "Baron Rothschild" got angry and began to beat the new arrival. I pulled the emergency brake, opened the window and cried that a passenger had suddenly gone insane, whereupon I took hold of the "Baron," that he should not escape the second time.

The next moment the door was thrown open, and I found myself face to face with one of the alienists who had examined me and declared me hopelessly insane. He gave a sign to a couple of brakemen, who overpowered and bound me.

My sufferings lasted a couple of hours, until the mistake was discovered by a relative of the "Baron." I have never again used my key.

of the house was seated all in a heap, with his head sunk upon his left shoulder, and that ghastly, inscrutable smile upon his face. He was stiff and cold, and had clearly been dead many hours. It seemed to me that not only his features, but all his limbs were twisted and turned in the most fantastic fashion. By his hand upon the table there lay a peculiar instrument—a brown, close-grained stick, with a stone head like a hammer, rudely lashed on with coarse twine. Beside it was a torn sheet of note paper with some words scrawled upon it. Holmes glanced at it, and then handed it to me.

"You see," he said, with a significant raising of the eyebrows.

In the light of the lantern I read, with a thrill of horror, "The sign of the four."

"In God's name, what does it all mean?" I asked.

"It means murder," said he, stooping over the dead man. "Ah, I expected it. Look here!" He pointed to what looked like a long, dark thorn stuck in the skin just above the ear.

"It looks like a thorn," said I.

"It is a thorn. You may pick it out. But be careful, for it is poisoned."

I took it up between my finger and thumb. It came away from the skin so readily that hardly any mark was left behind. One tiny speck of blood showed where the puncture had been.

"This is all an insoluble mystery to me," said I. "It grows darker instead of clearer."

"On the contrary," he answered, "it clears every instant. I only require a few missing links to have an entirely connected case."

We had almost forgotten our companion's presence since we entered the chamber. He was still standing in the doorway, the very picture of terror, wringing his hands and moaning to himself. Suddenly, however, he broke out into a sharp, querulous cry.

"The treasure is gone!" he said. "They have robbed him of the treasure! There is the hole through which we lowered it. I helped him to do it! I was the last person who saw him! I left him here last night, and I heard him lock the door as I came downstairs."

"What time was that?"

"It was 10 o'clock. And now he is dead, and the police will be called in, and I shall be suspected of having had a hand in it. Oh, yes, I am sure I shall. But you don't think so, gentlemen? Surely you don't think that it was I? Is it likely that I would have brought you here if it were I? Oh, dear! oh, dear! I know that I shall go mad!" He jerked his arms and stamped his feet in a kind of convulsive frenzy.

"You have no reason to fear, Mr. Sholto," said Holmes, kindly, putting his hand upon his shoulder. "Take my advice, and drive down to the station and report the matter to the police. Offer to assist them in every way. We shall wait here."

The little man obeyed in a half-stupefied fashion, and we heard him stumbling down the stairs.

The Pearls of Palong Aitu---J. F. D

IT was at Castleton's place in the Rue de Rivoli, at Papeete, that Captain Jack Cameron and "Black" Zimmerstein became friendly. Zimmerstein wasn't that sort of guy you'd mistake for an agent of the Boston South Sea Mission Association. He wore red striped pajamas and a grass hat, walked on his toes like a sore-footed Tamil, and carried the ugliest facial area between Kamikamo and Mauke Harbor. I guess it was pretty ugly when Zimmerstein first got it, but after a drunken Samoan had drawn a knife across it, he was worth a second glance from a freak collector. Gee! he was ugly!

Zimmerstein drank his fourth gin and put his bare feet up on the oilcloth-covered table. There was no etiquette at Castelton's. "Pay for your drinks and do as you like," was Castelton's motto, and, besides, Zimmerstein wasn't the kind of man that it was healthy to row with. A lot of his enemies had committed suicide with their finances in good order. A copra trader at Raiatea blew out his brains although both his arms were paralyzed, but everybody round that quarter suspected a miracle instead of suspecting Zimmerstein. Suspicion didn't annoy the miracle.

"Say," snapped Cameron, "can't you knock off lifting that bottle with your toes?"

"Capitan Cameron," he murmured, g---ling the gin bottle with his big toes, "I verree much tink I could put you on to someteenk."

Captain Jack brought his eyelids together and peered at Zimmy through the slits. The only thing Zimmerstein ever put a man onto was a board big enough to carry him to his grave.

"Yes," murmured Cameron; then as the gin bottle was balanced on the big toes, he added quietly: "You're handy with your feet. Why, you could handle a knife with your toes."

Zimmerstein nearly dropped the bottle, and he looked as vicious as a red-necked cobra. Somebody got a knife in the stomach in a card game at Avarua, and every player at the table swore he had his hands over the cloth. Zimmy was one of the players, but I don't know whether Captain Jack knew that when he praised the agility of Zimmerstein's big toes.

"But this something you've just mentioned," continued Cameron, as the other sat frowning at him. "What is it?"

Zimmerstein pushed the bottle to the other side of the table, so that those handy toes of his would be out of the way of temptation; then he lifted his flabby jowl and dragged a wash-leather bag up through the neck of his pajama coat.

"I was hear dot you know someteenk of pearls," he growled, leaning toward Captain Jack. "Do you not tink dis is a nice one?"

He put a sweet little "oyster gizzard" on the table, and we pushed our heads forward to examine it. It was a beauty! Cameron had spent some time scooping "black-lip" on the Bahrein fisheries and it made him smack his lips. It was pear-shaped, with a "skin" that would make a Hatton Garden dealer's eyes glisten, and Zimmy watched us as we stared at it.

"You wouldn't nuzzle dot out of der silt every day," he laughed. "Now I will show you its mate."

He dipped his dirty paw into the leather bag the second time and put another pearl 'longside the first, and we took the count. The sight of those two hit us hard in the emotional solar plexus, and Cameron was the only one who could jerk out a remark.

"Spirits of nitre!" he growled. "Where are you getting them from?"

"Out of dis bag!" cried Zimmerstein. "See! Number dree! Dat is der last. I call dem Faith, Hope an' Charity. Are dey not nice?"

Nice wasn't the word for that trinity. We had seen "The Eye of Siva," "The Tear of Niobe," "The San Cristobal," and a few other pearls that had been gathered out of the Pacific, but the record-breakers had nothing the best of those three. Zimmy's trio hadn't a fault, and they were that well matched that you couldn't tell them apart.

Captain Jack sat back in his chair and stuck his hands deep into his pockets, and Zimmerstein laughed craftily.

"Pretty?" he whispered. "Eh?

"What you say? Fit for a queen? Hah! Fit for a goddess, mine friendt."

"How the devil did you match them?" growled Cameron.

"How did I match 'em?" grinned Zimmerstein. "I didn't. Dot is der joke. Dey were matched years ago. Do you know how many years? Five hundred, one dousand, p'raps five dousand years! Dot makes you blink, eh?"

Captain Jack lit a cigar and watched old Red Pajamas through the smoke wreaths. The Rue de Rivoli at Papeete can hatch more yarns in a day than the New York Sunday supplements can produce in a year, but skyscraper fiction wasn't a specialty with Zimmerstein. Fact was his sheet anchor, and, besides, that bunch of pearls looked a likely introduction.

"Fire ahead," muttered Cameron. "I'm ready for anything at present."

Zimmerstein's toes handed him a nobbler of gin, then he put the pearls back in the wash-leather bag, cursed the Chinese boy who knocked his elbow in rushing to serve a sailor from a French man-o'-war, and then turned to Captain Jack.

"Der profits will be half an' half," he murmured. "I gif der information an' you act on it. How is dot?"

"Go on," snapped Cameron. "It's a certainty that you'll get your share. Say, can't you knock off lifting that bottle with your toes? It puts my nerves on edge."

A little spasm of temper flickered over Zimmerstein's ugly dial, but he chased it off and gave his toes the tip to keep quiet.

"Dree weeks ago I buy der first," he muttered; "two weeks ago I buy der second, and last week I buy der third."

"And?" murmured Captain Jack.

"And dere are more coming," muttered Zimmerstein. "Dot is all."

A big, ugly Tahitian poked his head in the door, and Zimmerstein slipped under the table like a turtle slipping into his shell. Zimmy could move as quick as a rock snake when he wanted to. He kept a double watch for trouble, and he sidestepped beautifully when he saw it swoop over the horizon.

The native ran his eye over the room, then he backed into the darkness, and Zimmerstein crawled out. He took another swill of gin, winked at Cameron and walked away from the table. Half way to the door he turned, tiptoed quickly back and pushed his ugly face close to Captain Jack's ear.

"Der profits must be half and half," he growled. "I am shust going to buy anodder beauty like der ones I show you."

Cameron smoked for a few minutes in silence, then he flung his cigar out through the honeysuckle vine that shaded the veranda.

"Well, I'm feazed," he cried. "If that doesn't beat—Say!"—he turned to Driscoll and shook his arm—"What did you think of those pearls?"

"Faith, they're bigger an' better skinned than 'The White Ghost'!" answered Driscoll. "They're the finest"—— He broke off and pounced hurriedly on his half-finished bottle of English ale. Captain Jack had dived into the night and we went after him at a jog trot.

We formed ourselves into the Captain Jack Cameron Detective Agency that evening. Mato, the native that poked his head into Castelton's door in search of Zimmerstein, had a reputation that a road agent wouldn't envy, and it was Mato that was selling pearls that a rajah would give his eye teeth to get hold of.

"One a week," growled Driscoll. "Mother o' Moses! Did any one ever hear the like? There was a red-haired woman in Ballyporeen that made emeralds, so me mother told me"——

"I'll bet the emeralds weren't as green as you," growled Captain Jack. "Keep your mouth shut and your ears open. Mato has struck a find that has the Kimberley fields fired to the ash dump."

The more we thought over those three pearls in Zimmerstein's leather bag the more impressed we became. They got between us and our sleep

Papeete is only a one-horse ... Tahitian like Mato who k... the place, could keep the w... busy.

It was four days after Zimm... showed us pearls that Driscoll made a ... p. Mato had fooled Mackey by slipping t... gh a tumble-down Chinese shanty at the back of the Espla-nade, but Driscoll had picked him up three miles down the coast, and the Irishman came puffing back into the town like a cheap gas-wagon, to let us know that Mato had set off in a dinghy toward Moorea. Didn't we hustle? We piled into a big sailing boat that Captain Jack had waiting, and away we went after him, Cameron sweeping the ocean with his glasses.

It was midday when we sighted him; he showed up like a black speck on the ruby-tinted ocean, and Cameron grunted joyfully.

"It's Palong Aitu he's making for," he growled. "Slap up that spare sail! That cockleshell of his is travelling like a torpedo boat."

We went cracking after Mato at a gait that would have made the Defender look foolish, but we didn't get any closer to the nig. He was going some surely. We tore a furrow like a United States battleship on a trial cruise, but the speck was hustling, too. Gee! it was that. We piled that old boat with canvas till it looked like a Harlem roof on washing day, but just when we were picking up a little the Unexpected flopped down on us with both feet. One of those little fog patches that come up like a big cotton ball on a fine day toppled over on us and Mato was smeared off the map.

"Never mind!" yelled Cameron. "Hold her as she is! We'll pick him up again as soon as this fog lifts."

We went blundering through that mist blanket with every rag set. No one seemed to trouble much about butting into anything.

"The Tahitian priests used to come across to Palong Aitu in the old days," growled Mackey. "They conducted some of their old heathen rites on the island. Perhaps Mato has stumbled on to one of their treasure boxes."

"It looks like it," snapped Captain Jack. "Zimmerstein said that those pearls were matched a thousand years——Hi there! Put her over! Hard, man! Hard!"

Cameron's ears saved us then for sure. He caught the sound of the Pacific pounding a rocky cliff, and we swung just in time. Sufferin' sinners! Yes!

"That was a close shave," muttered Steele. "What have we struck now? A current?"

We slipped along that wall of rock close enough to hit it with a stone, but we couldn't get away from it. Mother o' me! No! We had swung into a stretch of water that was like a slab of smooth jade with lace trimmings where the rocks fretted the edge, and a Coney Island chute-the-chute had nothing on us for the next few laps. We raced along at a speed which made us think there was a hole in the old Pacific, and that we were going into it head first.

Captain Jack opened his mouth to yell out an order about shortening sail, but the Fates took the job out of our hands. The darned old hooker was sucked bodily through a tremendous hole in the face of the wall, and the spread of the canvas came down on us when the top of the mast hit the entrance and snapped off with a sound like a twelve-inch gun!

Cameron was the first to fight himself clear of the mess of tackle, but we weren't long behind him. Jumping jigsaws! We never had a sight of anything like that before. We were swirling round in a great bowl of water that was all turquoise and green and molten sapphire, and right in the centre of the cave a mica-splashed rock rose up like a pillar, till it touched the roof of the place about two hundred feet above us. The light came in from a big hole in the side that opened on to the surface of the island.

'Gee! Wasn't that water pretty! The colors burst up in it in patches and wiggled along it like painted snakes that looked so darned real they gave Driscoll the jumps. If you boiled all the colors in the world and stirred 'em round with a stick you'd get an idea of that place.

Steele hooked the rocky pillar in the centre with a boathook, and we hung on for our lives. The old tub swirled round and round as if it was on a pivot, then we spun into a little cove at the foot of the big rock pillar and jammed ourselves tight while that flood swirled past.

That was the first chance we had to get a good look at the big rock pyramid in the centre of the cave. Gee! it was a height! Its sides shone like the cocoanut-shell cups that get enamelled with the acid of the kava, but up in the clefts on the side were patches of trailing convolvulus, scarlet poinsettia and coral plant that hung down over the ledges and waved to us. It was a fairyland for certain. The top of it was wrapped in a shimmering mist that glistened like a thousand rainbows where the light came through from a hole in the roof, and while we were trying to find out whether the pillar touched the top of the cave, Captain Jack gave a little whistle.

"Keep quiet!" he whispered. "Don't breathe! There's Mato hanging on to that stone slab right up near the roof!"

It was Mato sure, but it made our blood run cold to look at him. Peppercorns and catnip! What a height he was up! A stone slab, like those old haanungas at Kologa that were put up two thousand years ago, came out from the hole in the roof to a point within two yards of the piller in the centre; and along that slab Mato was crawling!

"And Mato was fishing—fishing for something a little bit more precious than fish, though."

We craned our necks as we looked up at him doing the Blondin stunt. In that light he looked like a black fly hanging on to one of the floor joists of heaven, but we knew it was Mato. Those four days that we had followed him around Papeete made us familiar with every bit of his wardrobe as well as his features.

The way that he slipped about on that slab told us what sort of a danger promenade it was. The mist made it wet and greasy, and every time the native changed his position we expected to see him come somersaulting down.

"What's his game?" growled Cameron. "He can't reach that pillar by crawling along there."

I guess Mato knew that a little better than we did. He edged along inch by inch till he got to the end of the stone slab, then he lay flat on his stomach with his head over the edge that was nearest the rock.

"What's he doing?" grunted Steele. "Why, he's fishing!"

And Mato was fishing—fishing for something a little bit more precious than fish, though. As we lay on our backs and stared up at him, the face of that rock that was nearest the Tahitian came out plain to us like one of those picture puzzles when you put in the piece that at brings out the idea of the sketch. Gee! it was queer! The rock right in front of Mato was carved into the shape of a frowning devil, and the scoop that the native had tied to a length of fishing line was being dragged backward and forward in the stone bowl the grinning idol had in his hands.

"The pearls!" gasped Cameron. "He's fishing 'em out of the stone basin!"

We knew then why Mato didn't bring more than one pearl to Zimmerstein at a time. The fishing game was too exhausting. Gee! Yes! We watched him throw that scoop into the stone bowl about five score times, and every time he threw it down he had to use his hands and feet to stop himself from following it.

"He'll earn whatever he gets!" muttered Captain Jack. "If he keeps that up—by the Great Horn Spoon! he's got one!"

Mato had done the trick all right. Hanging on by his nails he hauled up the pearl, tucked it into his bosom, and started to slide back along that greasy slab. Mother o' me! what a crawl it was! The thing was a smooth as a Pathan's tongue, and Mato wiggled about on it like an old woman on a toboggan slide.

Two yards from safety he took a chance and made a run for it. But the slab had a special wet patch ready for him. The Tahitian's feet went up in the air and he spun round in the air like a humming top.

"He's down!" yelled Driscoll. "He's over!"

But Mato wasn't down. As he left the stone his hands gripped a liana vine, and hanging on to it for all he was worth he dragged himself up to safety. But Driscoll's yell had told the Tahitian that he had an audience. He leaned over the edge and glared at us for about five minutes, then he jumped up and trotted off through the opening.

"You've done it now," growled Captain Jack, turning to Driscoll. "He'll know that Zimmerstein put us on his trail."

"An' what does that matter? grinned Driscoll. "Faith, he'll know the next time he comes here that somebody has been on his trail."

"That's a question," snapped Cameron. "We'll have to reach that idol's treasure bowl from here, and it'll be a mighty stiff climb."

"Faith, I'd climb to the clouds to get me fingers on one of those little beauties that Zimmerstein showed us," laughed the Irishman. "There was a fairy in Ireland in the time of Brian Boru"——

"Get hold of the end of that rope," interrupted Captain Jack. "Jerk it over that ledge. Hold it there! Now, you know so much about fairies you'd better go first and I'll follow, and may the Lord look after our necks while we're getting there."

That was a climb! Mackey, Steele and I sat in the boat and watched Driscoll and the Captain go up the face of that rock that shot up as straight as the Metropolitan Tower. Geewhillikens! it was a stunt! Hanging on to a ledge they'd lasaoo another ledge above, and up they'd climb, hand over hand.

"Crike!" gasped Steele, as Captain Jack lassoed the big stone bowl in the hands of the idol. "If Mato has emptied the treasure box I'll hop into this water and commit suicide."

Cameron tackled the last lap with Driscoll holding the rope. We could hardly breathe. Our imaginations were doing acrobatic stunts in guessing how many pearls were in that bowl, and every time we'd put the number up to four o. five we'd get a cold chill down our spinal columns and then we'd know the blamed old thing was empty. We just thought over the number of times Captain Jack had been pipped on the post, and the three of us groaned together when he caught the edge of the bowl and dragged himself up so that he could look in.

"Not an egg in the nest," muttered Steele. "Good Lord! And poor fool me thinking I could get enough to go home to the wife and kiddies in Harlem."

Cameron drew his legs up, rolled over the side of the big bowl and disappeared, and then he let out a whoop that woke every old echo in the cave.

"He's got some!" shouted Mackey, and when we looked up Driscoll was dancing an Irish jig.

Captain Jack held up his ten fingers and we gave a cheer that they could have heard over in Auckland if they had been listening. Ten pearls! Didn't we yell!

"Cucumbers and cantaloupes!" shouted Steele. "That's one each for us and five for Zimmerstein! Me for Manhattan after this! Twist this old boat around! They're coming down."

Captain Jack slipped down into the boat and took those ten beauties out of his mouth. Gee! Weren't they lovely! They were as big as the three that Zimmerstein showed us at Castleton's place, and every one of 'em was perfect.

Cameron put five in the palm of his big hand and held it out.

"Each man take one," he said.

Steele had the first choice, then Driscoll, Mackey and I picked, and Cameron put the one that was left into his pocket with the five he was keeping for Zimmerstein.

"Now for Papeete," he cried, "And if I'm any judge we'll have a rough trip getting out."

We pulled the boat into the current and away we went like a streak of lightning, those violet and crimson and heliotrope strips of water racing alongside us. There was no chance of dodging that flood. We had as much chance of paddling against it as we'd have of rowing up Niagara Falls, so we sat tight and let the old boat swish.

I guess we would have whipped one of those thirty-six-knot torpedo destroyers on that run. The cave narrowed into a rock tunnel that wasn't much wider than the Harlem, and we hummed through it. The hole got darker and narrower, and we were just beginning to think that the old boat would turn itself into a plug for a hole leading down into Asia when we went out with a jerk into the Pacific, and you can bet we howled a bit with joy when we saw the sky.

It was long after dark when we got to Papeete, and the five of us started out for Zimmerstein's bungalow so that Captain Jack could deliver him his share of the spoils. We got to the little path leading up from the avenue when we noticed a crowd round the place, and somehow we guessed that tainga were not right.

"What's the matter?" asked Cameron, as a fat Frenchman came stumblind down the path.

"Sacre!" said Frenchy. "The pig Mato he was drive a knife into Zimmerstein."

"Dead?" asked Captain Jack.

"Tonnerre de Dieu! I guess that he is," snapped the fat man. "There are no more tricky games to be done by Mr. Zimmerstein."

Captain Jack did a bit of questioning around Papeete next day, and then he came back to our camp.

"Boys," he said, "Zimmy has no relatives and no friends. I think he was too bad a lot to have either. Well, there's these five pearls—go ahead, Driscoll, take your pick."

And we took one apiece from the Captain's big hand and muttered a prayer for old Zimmerstein's soul as we did so. He had gone to a place where those little smooth-skinned beauties were no use.

"There's a boat leaving for Auckland to catch the 'Friaco steamer to-morrow, stammered Cameron. "Mother o' me! I want to see the old red ferryboats on the Hudson, and the darned old trolley cars, and the big skyscrapers, and the crowds in the restaurants, and—and"——

He wiped his eyes with the back of his hand and turned to the door so that we couldn't see his face, but we wouldn't have cared. The whole blamed lot of us were crying, and we weren't ashamed one little bit.
